THE Cincinnati Coroner has just returned a verdict on account of the deaths in the riots there some months ago. He finds that the rioters were killed by the officers of the law in the discharge of their duty in preserving the peace, which is anything but satisfactory to the Germans.

AFTER damage of $30,000 had been done by fire at the mission of San Jose, in California, the old church was saved by the use of river wine as an extinguisher. D. E. Buford & Co., of the Rock Island (Ill.) Plow Works, have made an assignment. The liabilities are $400,000, while the assets are placed at $800,000. Theopil A. Hart, wholesale boots and shoes, at Toledo, Ohio, have made an assignment, with liabilities of $100,000.

FAIRCHILD, Sawyer, bankers at Indianapolis, closed their doors, owing to inability to realize, but claim that the assets are ample to pay all claims. The failure caused runs on other banks. The treasurer places the liabilities at $1,500,000, with assets of about $2,200,000. J. K. Armsby & Co., canned-goods dealers at No. 22 and 24 River street, Chicago, have transferred their entire stock and assets to George H. Nevill & Co., of Minneapolis, the inventory being $120,000. It is admitted that the firm owes $200,000, mainly in Chicago and New York. It has been doing a business of from $2,000,000 to $3,000,000 per year. The dry goods house of Thomson, Alabaman, Bell & Co., at Oakland, Cal., closed its doors "because of inability to pay $800,000." Philip Wiener, of the Peoria Brewery, of Moline, Ills., has made an assignment.

Four men escaped from jail at Marion, Iowa, by cutting the bars of their cells and knocking down the jailer. All were recaptured. the Sheriff sending a bullet through Mitchell, the Cedar Rapids murderer. The estimated loss by June rains on the wheat crop in California is placed at 135,000 tons, and of barley at 80,000 tons. The hay crop was injured 40 per cent. By the explosion of a boiler in a saw-mill near Bloomington, Ind., four men were killed and six others injured.

A WOMAN who keeps a saloon at Marshalltown, Iowa, continued to sell liquor contrary to the prohibitory law. She was arrested and gave bonds, but still defied the law. The Sheriff attempted to arrest her. She resisted, drawing two revolvers on him. After he had secured assistance he managed to take her to the jail, but the angry woman threatening to tear it down she was released. The woman's residence said to be instigated by a local literary The Rev. L. O. Thompson, a popular author and preacher, his son, Sidney, and another lad named Freddie Bishop, were drowned in the Illinois River at Henry, Ill., by the skiff capsizing in the eddies near Bedford. Charles Polly, a farm-laborer on the heights of St. Louis, was buried from the cemetery by the pretending stop of a mad car. He fell eighty feet to the water, and was drowned before could reach him. D. E. Swan, chief clerk in the Treasurer's office of the Northern Pacific, of St. Paul, has embezzled several thousand dollars and fled with a woman. A dispatch from Ironton, Ohio, announces the failure of Hiram Campbell & Sons, iron manufacturers, and places the bad liabilities at $200,000.

THE SOUTH.

THREE men were executed at Fort Smith, Ark., for murders committed in Indian Territory.

A DISPATCH from Starkville, Miss., says that in October, 1882, R. J. Parsons two boys, aged 12 and 14 years, disappeared. It now turns out that a negro named Newton Carpenter, living with Parish at the time, poisoned water which the boys drank. Newton confided the matter to a negro woman who a few days ago told Parish. Carpenter was arrested and said he got the poison from a negro doctor, Ned Marks, a notoriously bad character. Marks was also arrested. A posse of half a dozen men had them in charge, when the prisoners were seized by a disguised mob and hanged. A masked mob took Dick James, a negro, from jail at Owensboro, Ky., and hanged him. The jailer fired on the party, killing one man, and fatally wounding another. The mob then shot the jailer, who died soon after.

MRS. ALMIRA HART LINCOLN PHELPS, an educational authoress and teacher of high repute, died at Baltimore July 1, in her 93d birthday. She leaves an estate valued at $1,000,000.

THREE masked men at Mitchell's Station, near Culleper, Va., bound and gagged Frank Somerville, took him to the edge of a cliff, robbed him of personal clothes and turned his hands. They then ran over the cliff and escaped with $1,000 in money. When Somerville was discovered he was unconscious.

WASHINGTON.

AT the solicitation of some of the leading trade and industrial organizations of the country the Secretary of State last week directed the preparation of a circular letter with a view to securing through consular officers the fullest obtainable information concerning the condition of labor throughout the world, and especially in Europe. Very full reports have been received from Consuls everywhere, and are now in process of preparation in the Bureau of Statistics of the State Department for the press. The material embodies information relating not only to the rates of wages paid in all classes of labor as well as the prices paid for the necessaries of life, clothing, rent, food, etc., and only from the American point of view is what the necessaries of life comprise, but the actual nutritive quality of the articles consumed. Within the limits of Washington a Chinese opium-house exhibited with a local newspaper man, and several persons were killed.

It is understood that a successor to Judge Drummond will not be appointed until December, when Congress meets. Postmaster-General Gresham will then be appointed almost without a doubt. In the meantime business in the United States Circuit Court will be seriously delayed.

POLITICAL.

To a reporter at Lockport, N. Y., Gen. Hinks said he did not like the Democratic nominees, but he would take no definite action until he had read the letters of acceptance of all the nominees.

BEN BUTLER arrived in Washington last week and had an interview with the President. He refused positively to state what he intended to do politically during the campaign. His friends, however, assert with great positiveness that he will accept the nomination of the Greenbackers and anti-Monopolists, and make the race for President. Butler says the statements which have been published concerning his political attitude since the Democratic convention are fabrications of magazine reporters. The Democrats of Michigan will hold their State convention at Detroit Aug. 19. The Greenback State Convention will convene at Grand Rapids Aug. 27.

GENERAL.

IN the National Base-Ball League contest the Boston lost with 16 games won; the Providence has won 38, New York 31, Buffalo 27, Chicago 26, Cleveland 21, Philadelphia 18, and Detroit 12. In the Union Association St. Louis has won 30 games, Cincinnati 28, Chicago 27, Baltimore 25, Cleveland 23, Philadelphia 15, Washington 14, and Kansas City 3. In the Northwestern League the Grand Rapids and Quincy have won 36 games each, Davenport 34, Peoria 31, Saginaw 28, Milwaukee 23, and Minneapolis and Muskegon 17 each.

THE total value of the produce exports from the United States last week was $7,973,098.

IT is reported by way of Jamaica that the Chief Justice of Honduras under Aguero obtained two rather important victories over the Spanish troops recently. The Captain-General has summoned a council of officers to discuss a concerted plan against the rebels. The Government troops are said to be demoralized.

FOREIGN.

AT a meeting of the Tory Lords held at Lord Salisbury's house, in London, it was resolved with practical unanimity to reject the Gladstone franchise bill unless the Government ingle an amendment in the character of the redistributing or redistricting measure which they are to introduce next session. Lord Salisbury said that if the Peers should pass the bill now it would be out of stalemate. Lord Wemyss, a Scotch Tory Peer, and the Earl of Jersey urged compromise to no effect. The decision of the Lords creates great excitement in England. The people of Dublin have raised $1,000 to indemnify the editor of United Ireland for the cost of defending the recent libel suit. Detective James E. French has been accused for committing perjury, and three army officers have fled to avoid trial for conspiring with French against Cornwall. The British Government has offered the Duke of Marlborough $100,000 for the purchase of his Blenheim collection. The Hon. Lionel Playfair, ex-Speaker of the House of Commons, will sail for America Sept. 7.

AN express train on the Manchester and Sheffield Railway was wrecked near Penkridge, England. Twenty-five persons were killed and many serious injured. A person on a piece of the engine of the train broke, and the train jumped the track and fell through a bridge. The scenes under the bridge after the train had fallen were terrible to witness. The carriages were almost shattered to splinters. The groans of men and the shrieks of the women and children were heartrending in the extreme. Some delay was experienced before the victims could be extricated.

The prince of Vienna has been instructed to arrest Mormon missionaries who are found endeavoring to make converts of French, the Chief of the Irish detective force, has been sent to jail on a serious charge.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

COL. JOHN A. MARTIN, editor of the Atchison Champion, was nominated for Governor of Kansas by the Republican Convention at Topeka. Albert H. Horton was nominated for Chief Justice of the State Supreme Court, and W. A. Johnson for Attorney-General.

PAUL HAMMER, the alleged American who has been arrested in Austria on charges of preaching Mormonism, turns out to be a young man named Jones, of Utah, and only a resident of Nevada for a very brief time. Having served the full term of his sentence at Cairo, Russia, officers will be sent to take him to their place.

A COLISEUM will be erected at Aberdeen, Dakota, with a view to obtaining permanent power to run a mill producing 200 barrels of flour per day. The capital of Lake, duplicated in the members of the Ward family, of Devil's Lake, Dakota, was followed by the capture of the defaulter, Frank E. Everett, banker at Gobbler, Colo., somewhat similar while in same from the use of chloral. Mrs. Syl. via S. Oda, living near Cape Ann, Mass., committed suicide by drinking kerosene and poison.

An important telegraphic combination was consummated last week. The Postal, Bunnell, and Dale, and Bankers and Merchants' Companies agreed to pool all earnings and expenses for a period of twenty years, the profits of the lines of the three companies will be underwritten annually at the consolidated rate of $1,000,000 for the Postal, $10,000 of pole-line and $25,000 of wire, which will be guaranteed in connection with the Mackay cables. Knight & Wilson's foundry, machine shop, and skill-saw works at Alfredo, Ontario, were destroyed by fire last week, the loss of $10,000.

LEFTY GRIFFEY and six of his fellow-explorers were taken from their permanent camp in South Greenland, on June 22, by the shamers Thesis and Rose, and were landed July 17 at St. John's, Newfoundland. Seventeen others of the expedition perished from starvation, and one was lost, while hunting walk. The report of both of the party were brought back, the remains of the other having been buried on the ice in the winds. Lefty and his surviving associates would have gone back to the Greenland hooks but for the relief expedition. Thus far the loss of life in Greenland has been known point to the northward. Capt. Adolph Hoff, of the Rose, gives the following particulars of the discovery and rescue of Lieut. Greely and his companions:

The officer in charge of the second relief expedition, Lieut. Colwell, of the party, was all well, and had left Fort Conger Aug. 9, and after an exceedingly perilous voyage arrived at Barrel Inlet Sept. 22. The vessel also carried the news of the relief expedition of the victorious expiring party were encamped. Lieut. Greely, Sergt. Brown, Sergt. Rice, and Sergt. Ralph were all dead when found, and had fallen on the warmest and other tents. We entered and saw a scene of unspeakable misery and desolation. Sergt. Rice, starving, crawled out to us. One of the officers was selected to go during. We set out on the journey to Cape Sabine, and on the 6th dispatched the launch to the Hatteras for medicines. Capt. Pike and Dr. Ames came on shore, a fire was kindled, hot milk-punch was prepared, restoratives were applied, and in four hours we had the satisfaction of seeing Greely and his companions moved from the ice-foot and brought down to the steam-launch to be transferred to the Thesis. Greely was in a state of stupor, from which he had slept almost ever since we rescued him. Rice, who was the last to be taken from the ice, was conscious, but very weak. Greely's feet were frozen, and he was in a state of mental stupor, or rather in a state of sleep, from which he could not be roused. We left the Thesis and the Rose at Godhavn, and the Thesis arrived at St. John's, Newfoundland, on the 17th inst.

MOB VENGEANCE.

Infuriated Citizens of Greensboro, Ky., Lynch a Negro.

The Jailer Shot Down, and Two of the Mob Killed.

(Greensboro (Ky.) Telegram.)

An armed mob of about 300 men, mostly dead, killing the jailer, W. J. Vines, breaking in the doors of the well-guarded jail, and hanging Richard Mays, a negro, and and hanging him to a tree on the court-house yard. The court house and jail are surrounded by crowds of people, discussing the outrage and deploring the loss of a brave county officer, who died at his post of duty.

The negro had a preliminary hearing yesterday attempting assault on the person of Miss Kelly, daughter of former living a few miles above Greensboro, about ten days ago. The mob had organized on several nights driving from place to place in the neighborhood of their degree. Last night about midnight, a very even-spoken man returning to the city he was hailed by five masked men near the guard road full-page, but suffered to pass without molestation. Many persons in the city were on the lookout for a Sam by night and from the hour of 9 they were and disappointed. They entered the city about 1:30 o'clock and surrounded the jail. The jailer called to his wife to have his pistols in readiness, and refused to open the doors of the jail. The thousand of the mob, 300 strong, then fired on the officer of the law and intended to do his duty, and called upon the mob to "come up the lines and then do his duty." He refused to do so, and the mob fired on him. He fired back, killing two of the mob and wounding some one in the crowd cried, "Boys, do your duty."

The jailer was at this time up stairs on a back porch on the north side of the jail, and just after firing the last shot ran to his residence. The mob then began firing on the jail, and soon had the door of the Sheriff and his son Thomas, in key-guard about 16. They fired thirteen shots, the mob firing, in the opinion of the jailer, about 300 shots. The jailer then from the porch and his son from the front door, and the mob then ceased firing, and called upon the jailer to surrender, saying that they were not full and to Tom Lucas, and that we placed on a horse and quickly carried off.

After leaving six shots from the porch the jailer was shot, the ball entering low right side, near the nipple. He was carried back before he had a chance to make any resistance. After surrendering his son had him stripped of every bit of clothing and placed on the back of a wild broncho, which was started off in a square lashing. Before morning Richard Mays was found, and was therefore unable to tell anything about the terrible affair. The jailer's wife and two children were in the house at the time of the outrage was committed on the night of May 27, and he was rescued on the morning of June 3, which would make seven days that he had been in chain. The prisoners are fully satisfied, and the jailer expressed a wish that they should be kept in the jail for the mob. After hanging the negro the mob dispersed, leaving a number of weeks blood-by jail premises. It is stated that the negro was not the man who took a direct course, and, therefore, must have crossed the river and escaped in Illinois. When fully restored to health Mr. Vines will be tried for the shooting of Wilson, and in this he will be backed by Greensburg and those of the Opelika and Mill Faith Company, who raised nearly thousands.

BOILER CATASTROPHE.

Several Men Killed and Wounded-The Bodies Shockingly Mangled.

(Birmingham (Ala.) dispatch.)

A terrible boiler explosion occurred near Harrisburg, Ala., on Saturday, with the sudden death of three persons, and perhaps fatally injuring four others. The shock was felt in the North Carolina, and in the home neighborhoods began gathering from every direction, which the people of the place a fearful spectacle presented itself for yards about every boiler, bricks and pieces of the boiler were scattered hundreds of feet. It seems that a new boiler had recently been put in the mill engine, which would not work, and it was thought that the trouble was in the boiler. Wesley Carter, head engineer, was absent killed. When found he was lying under a pile of rubbish. He had been dead about two hours. His head had been almost blown from his body, and his arms were broken. He was a single man.

Near him lay his son, dead, his head horribly mutilated, the skull in fact, and one leg almost blown off. He died in agony.

The most painful sight of all was old Billy Graves, who had only a few minutes before come over to the mill. He was standing near the boiler watching Carter's experiment when the explosion occurred. He lay fifty feet away, his head disjointed from his body, his legs broken, and pieces of the metal had pierced through his lungs and cause the patient to die of auto infection. 2. In a sick room, in which infants are sleeping, it is necessary to put a box or basket, containing a piece of quick lime and some charcoal, for the purpose of fixing the carbonic acid exhaled from the lungs, and of absorbing all foul air generated in the system, and given off by exhalation from the skin or otherwise.

Borrowing Books.

Never ask the loan of a very costly book or one belonging to a set, if you can avoid it.

Teach children to be very particular in regard to their books, and to ask whether their own or those of others.

If accident or injury result to a borrowed volume while away from its owner, honor requires that it shall be replaced by a new copy.

A person who borrows a book has no right to lend it to another without the express permission of the owner. This should be an unvarying rule.

A borrowed book should be covered and handled with care and nicety, and returned promptly. Nobody has a right to retain a borrowed book during an indefinite period.

An English Cattle-Owner Stripped and Tied to a Wild Pony.

Rescued After Seven Days-A Wronged Husband's Terrible Revenge.

Omaha dispatch to Chicago Herald.

Mr. Bernstein, a wealthy cattle-owner, whose herds range in the unorganized territory of Northwestern Nebraska, has just returned from the annual round-up of the region, and relates a tale of the plains that is in some respects a counterpart of the outlaws Morejon. When Bernstein reached his ranch about the middle of June he found his cowboys missing, a young man whom they had found from the head of a township, who discovered the months Morejon was looked to the lone cowboys, who at the time of the alleged outrage were returning to the city he was hailed by five masked men near the guard road full-page, but suffered to pass without molestation. THE TRACK OF DEATH.

The Cholera on the Increase in France-Washington Authorities Anxious.

A cable dispatch from Paris says: There are 4 deaths from cholera at Cette, one of which proved fatal. It is believed they are sporadic. The heat is intense and the streets are deserted. All the cholera patients have been removed to the hospitals to prevent homes in the suburbs. The Mayor of Toulon has been struck down with the plague. There were seventeen deaths at Marseilles during the last twenty-four hours, showing an increasing virulence in the epidemic. Dr. Koch has gone to Berne to confer with the Swiss authorities as to the best means of excluding cholera from Switzerland among the country people who are afraid to let the cholera in for fear of being quarantined. Thirteen deaths occurred here last night.

Austria is becoming alarmed, and has asked the Porte to cooperate in measures to prevent the cholera from entering Austria and Turkey.

The authorities of Odessa, Russia, have quarantined French vessels from the Mediterranean for two weeks. Every effort possible is being put forth to keep the cholera from the port.

London dispatch: Edwin A. Merrill, United States Consul General, has refused to grant clear bills to vessels leaving London and Liverpool for ports in the United States unless the American inspectors certify to the health of those on board.

Washington dispatch: Secretary Frelinghuysen has instructed the Consular officers at London, Liverpool, Marseilles, Havre, Bordeaux, Glasgow, and Hamburg to advise anxious emigrant physicians to inspect all vessels and passengers departing for the United States from those ports. The Consular officers referred to are instructed to refuse clean bills of health in all cases, except upon the recommendation of the Sanitary Inspector. The Consuls are instructed to report by cable any cases of infectious or contagious disease.

THE DEMOCRACY.

Proceedings of the National Convention at Chicago.

Fourth Day.

Chairman Vilas called the convention to order at precisely 11 o'clock, and prayer was offered by Rev. Clinton Locke.

Secretary Saulsbury began the Chairman of the Pennsylvania delegation withdrew the name of Samuel J. Tilden. The clerk then proceeded to call the roll. Some Illinois votes were cast for Thomas A. Hendricks, and the roll was followed by a tumultuous outburst of applause and several minutes.

Mr. Bennett, of Missouri, forced his way through the aisle and climbed up to the rostrum and was received with enthusiasm. He said he was in no mood to speak. He was a Democrat, of Tennessee, informed the Chairman of the Illinois delegation that Mr. Hendricks was entitled to the Illinois vote. Mr. Bennett

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic State Convention to nominate candidates for state offices, and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of other business will be held in the City of Grand Rapids, in Powers' Opera House, on

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1884,

Commencing at 12 o'clock noon.

All voters of this state, irrespective of party associations and differences, who can unite with us in an effort for a return of honest and a pure and economical administration of government, and all who favor a reduction of tariff taxation, and a reform of our tariff laws, are cordially invited to participate in sending delegates to this convention.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for Governor at the last general election, and one for every fraction of not less than 250 votes. Every organized county is entitled to at least two delegates, and under the rule adopted a delegate must be a resident of the county he represents.

JEROME EDDY, Chairman.
H. F. PENNINGTON, Secretary.

Charlevoix county is entitled to two delegates.

Notes and News.

The Knights of Labor in Connecticut will support Cleveland and Hendricks.

Blaine's letter of acceptance is out. It is very long, covering subjects enough for a message to congress.

"Cleveland and reform; Hendricks and revenge for the fraud of 1876." Democrats, how's that for a battle cry?

J. V. Johnson has sold the Gratiot Democrat to H. F. Berry. The form of the paper is changed to an eight-column folio.

The closing proceedings and platform of the democratic convention will be found on our inside pages; also portraits and sketches of the candidates.

Protection puts its thieving hand stealthily into the pocket of the workingmen, fleeces his hard earnings and gives them to the millionaire manufacturer, or miner, or sugar planter. Stop thief!

The Chicago Times says of Blaine's letter: "His favorite issue is the tariff, and there is no uncertainty or ambiguity in his position about that. He is in favor of a tariff chiefly for spoliation and incidentally for revenue."

The people who think they can scare George William Curtis by calling him names don't know their man. He has had too much experience with pro-slavery mobs to mind the weak flings of his present detractors.—Detroit Times.

Jackson Patriot: "Protection to American labor," as illustrated by republican legislation, means taxation of the American laborer for the benefit of the American capitalist. Protective tariffs are a device of capital to rob labor.

Hendricks' candidacy for the vice-presidential office is spoken of as a "resurrection." If the amiable old gentleman can resurrect the popular majorities he received in various states in 1876, he will make Mr. Blaine tremble.—Detroit Times.

A great saving is effected by making wagons used on the farm with tires four inches wide. The wheels will not sink into the ground and the draft is consequently much lighter. English farm wagons are generally built in this way. On ordinary roads wide tires make the track better instead of cutting the ruts deeper, as narrow tires always do.

Mr. Blaine is in a queer position on the temperance question. Neal Dow gives him all the credit for Maine's prohibition laws—and Dow ought to know the facts—while his western organs like the Chicago Tribune devote columns daily to efforts to explain away his temperance record. Blaine has been too long in the field to ride two horses of that sort successfully.

The bolt from Blaine in Brooklyn, N. Y., is reported steadily growing, and the split in the young men's republican club there has seriously alarmed the republican leaders. A partial canvass of the club, the New York Sun says, leaves no doubt that a motion to indorse Blaine would be voted down by a decisive majority. The club has hitherto contributed the main supply of the money for the Kings county campaign, but this year it will neither work nor supply money. Another trouble with the Brooklyn republicans is the strenuous opposition to Blaine of the two republican papers published in the western district.

Democratic papers owning franchises in the Associated press are in a quandary. They know that the reports they receive are biased in the interest of the republican party, yet dare not dispense with that channel for news. The solution of the problem is difficult, and will be so until the public regards the concern as suspiciously as journalists do. Then it will either die or mend its ways. What is wanted of it is not political work, but news. —Ypsilanian.

The nomination of Cleveland and Hendricks is received at Washington with marked enthusiasm by democrats and with manifestations of alarm by republicans. Washington is not a democratic town, especially when congress is not in session and only the office holders are there, yet there is a sprinkling of democrats in the city left over from the recent adjournment and a few strugglers who have come in from various parts of the country. With them the sentiment is very strong that the work of the convention is the best it could have been.

A man in office that lives up to the law and his oath of office is not the man the republican party wants in power. Such a man is Grover Cleveland. There is no veto he has passed not what he objected to on constitutional rights. If a corporation is granted a charter, as was the elevated railway company of New York, on the condition that the rate of fare could not be reduced unless the company declared a dividend of 12 per cent, no court would allow the legislature to reduce the fares, unless such dividend was declared, and the governor that would allow the passage of such a bill would have been set down as incompetent to perform the functions of his office. Had the bill passed, the supreme court would have declared it unconstitutional, and the state involved in litigation. Cleveland had sense enough to see this, and is charged by such monopoly-controlled papers as the Post and Tribune as laboring for the moneyed men of this country. People in our own state familiar with this organ will see the foolishness of such a statement.—Eaton Rapids Times.

CLEVELAND Agents wanted to sell his life, written at his own house, with his exquisite autograph on the engraved frontispiece. Largest, elegant, handsomest book. Divinely illustrated. Sells at sight. Agents report more than the other lives that are sold for twice the price. Outsells all others ten to one. Hundreds made a profit of over $50 the first day. A harvest of gold will be realized by every worker. All new, fresh, and engrossing. Terms liberal and free, and the most liberal guarantee of fair dealing. Agents should not waste time and money on cheap, worthless, and stolen pictures, etc., on free-soil, which are inferior, prospectus less book. Act quickly; a day at the start is worth a week at the finish.

Welcome to the Governor.

About noon Thursday word was received that Gov. Begole, on the way to his cottage at Bay View, would stop over in our village a few hours. Preparations were made to give him a royal welcome. The decorations for the Knights Templar excursion of the day previous were easily made to serve as a welcome to the governor, and our common council and citizens turned out en masse in an escort. Carriages were provided for a drive through the principal streets, and a reception given at the Fountain City House. At 5 o'clock tea was served and brief speeches made by Messrs. Buttars, Nichols, Green, Crinkshank, Enton, Mayne, Miller, Crouter, Aldrich, Smith, and McLeod, with a response by the governor. The latter expressed himself well pleased with the village, its pleasant surroundings, and especially the enthusiastic welcome given by our citizens.

M. E. Church.

M. E. church, Pastor and Congregation, most cordially invite all strangers, and reorlers, to participate in the services held each Sabbath, morning and evening. All who are not otherwise engaged, will be welcomed: with the assurance, that a pleasant time, will be had. The Sabbath school, is quite a factor, in the enjoyableness of each Sabbath ser vice.

LOVE'S RETROSPECT.

Sweet-hearted maiden, in my wealth of flowers
You are the rose
Whose fragrance makes sweet the vanishing hours
In life's dull prose.

I ask you for the golden rose of love—
You smile assent,
Such happiness is such realms above!
I am content.

I take your hand, I clasp your waist, Your lips
Is yesterday
The years to come, but no'er shall fade that lilies
From memory.

Sweet-hearted maiden, in the scent of flowers
I see you, and forget the dreary hours
And lapse of years.

PETTIGREW'S PREDICAMENT,

BY LILY M. CURRY.

Pettigrew is one of the heart-hearted young fellows I ever knew. He comes to dine with me occasionally, and we have a good, long talk, afterward. He likes me, I fancy, because, while sympathizing with him in all his fortunes, good or ill, I have never yet lapsed foolish enough to fall in love with him.

The darkest days of all his life, he says, were those of the autumn in which I first made his acquaintance—before, and also at the time that we rescued neighbors in the top of that horrible dark-green building, some better than a tenement. You see, I cannot wholly avoid exposing a certain Mahatmism of my own just life while touching upon my friend's battles and bitterness; nevertheless, that shall not deter me.

"The darkest days," says Pettigrew, with a sigh of thankfulness that they have beenearly weathered, "were upon me when I found myself landed, that chilly November evening, supperless and penniless, in the dreary room I had rented during the afternoon of the old Irish janitress. You know, I believe, that I had come West the June preceding, secure upon the promise of a good position in a railroad office, a position which had turned out a mirage, I might say, leaving me in a sad predicament. A thousand miles away from the little New England town I had called home for twenty years, and where were the only people I knew or who knew me; with no relations or connections to write to for aid; with $3.17 in my pocket, and nothing to pawn. I stood thus alone in the great rushing Western city, and endeavored to consider the matter. Common sense introduced me to a cheap lodging-house and a morning paper with a column or two of advertisements for male help, the most of which I responded to in my most chirky mood. The following week I was fortunate enough to obtain a situation in the tobacco department of a 'Cheap John' store, where the lower classes traded and the vilest smells abounded. I stayed at that place through all the last summer weather, earning a salary just sufficient to pay my board. The first of August the floor-walker got mad and had me discharged.

"I did some copying for a week or so, at 2 cents a page. Then I went on the stage, as a supernumerary, and learned how to carry a spear or a torch unsingingly well. My healthy lungs availed me now; I could bellow out the bass part of the chorus of almost any light opera, once I had learned it, though I didn't know one note from another on paper, and had never taken a singing-lesson in my life.

"So off and on, along through August and September, I managed to keep life and body together and sinew to my feet. The money came October, but nothing to art or sing in. I did some more copying and tackled over into November, and landed one latter night in the room where you first knew me. I was tired and hungry enough to do almost anything. I remembered having read about some poor devil of a newspaper man who hesitated one night for an hour or two, not knowing whether to cut his throat or to sit down and write a funny paragraph, and who finally did the latter and was very successful the rest of his life. I lit the gas to warm the stoves and crawled into bed, trying to be thankful I had not to sleep in the gutter. There's nothing like comparing yourself with people worse off. Many a time I've gone along the street with an empty, gnawing stomach and make myself positively happy by pitying some poor cripple or blind beggar. And, mind you, all this time I had been watching out for a respectable situation at my work.

"Next morning I got up and said to my-self, 'Pettigrew, this won't do. You've got to have some breakfast, and where will you get it? That's the question. It was pretty cold, but I dressed and went down into the street, where it was much warmer because of the sunlight. I turned into the heart of the city, pondering the dubious prospects of breaking my fast, and casting wistful eyes upon such alluring signs as 'We give a piece of pie with every 15-cent meal.'

"I had walked but a few blocks, when a heavy hand fell upon my shoulder, and, turning, I beheld the familiar face of a fat lisper who had been a chorus comrade of mine in the last opera. Possessing a phenomenal voice, though one as uncultivated as my own, he had been engaged a year on the road with the company, and I had not seen him for a month or more. I was glad to shake his pudgy hand and greet him with a 'How are you?' First-rate, considering,' he replied. 'But it's so great fun traveling when you make so many one-night stands. We've had precious little sleep but what we could snatch on the cars. And such jumps! Three hundred miles and the BIG; and even if we did get to any hotel in the morning, and thought we could take a nap, they'd call a rehearsal.

"'Is that so?' said I. 'Well, at least you've had better luck than I.' 'How is that?' said he. 'Nothing,' said I, with a groan. 'I moved yesterday, and I've just got up. Haven't had any breakfast yet.' 'Neither have I,' said he. 'Come and take yours with me.'

"I needed no second invitation. The good and cordial laughly, and we had a substantial lay-out.

"'What are you doing now?' he asked, as we left the place, and were walking along the street. 'Nothing,' I said, frankly. 'I'd be glad to get hold of anything, for I'm hard up, and I don't know which way to turn.'

"He looked very sympathetic. 'I wish you were going with the company,' he said. 'But there's no use asking. I tried to get them to take my brother Jim; he's got a good voice. But they wouldn't take mother soul, they said. We start out again Sunday for the Northwest. Speaking of Jim, I shouldn't wonder if he could help you to something. He works at J——'s, the caterer, you know. He is sent out to private houses for evening parties mostly, and it's the busy season of it.'

"I swallowed the lump of pride that came into my throat at the notion of acting as waiter at an evening party, and accompanied him to see his brother. He was quite as good-natured and almost as fat as the lisper. Their name, I believe I forget it, was Taylor.

"'How he managed, I haven't the slightest idea. I believe there was some one sick of the regular force, and he must have fibbed endlessly as to my qualifications. However, they hired me, and I was sent that very night along with him and two others to a large ball.

"In his boundless good-nature he had hustled around and secured for me the regulation dress-suit and other necessities. Thus apparelled, I differed only from the male guests of the evening in the matter of gloves, the gentlemen appearing bare-handed, according to fashion's latest decree.

"'Taylor, my good friend, had given me any amount of instruction as to my duties; it was of great importance that I carry myself as stiffly erect as possible and affect a broad English accent. For the rest, I strove against embarrassment at the beauty of the decorations and the radiance of the ladies' toilets, kept an eye upon Taylor, and asked diffidentious at intervals.

"The force part of the evening passed without mishap, and my attributants, though necessarily limited to the supper-room, heard only the delightful music, and caught many a glimpse of dating beauty.

"The programme of miscellaneous dances, which was later to be followed by the opera, was yet in progress when all at once there seemed to come to me a hard space of glimmer. The company appeared to have quite forgotten the supper room.

"Impelled by curiosity, I ventured forth and down the wide passage to a position where I could see into the ball-room. I passed before this mirror and regarded my negligeed austerity with singled delight and amusement. Suddenly, however, I started and a surreptitious chill crept up my spinal column. There were two reflections in the mirror—two images of myself. Two Pettigrews, and one was looking over the other's shoulder. I turned quickly and stood facing my other self in the flesh, who had just emerged from the hall-room.

"'Hi, old fellow!' me in a sort of holy horror; glanced again in the mirror, then back at me. 'I did likewise.' 'Twins, by George!' he ejaculated. Then I saw that he wore no gloves. But, apart from this, he was identical in face, form, and costume. 'Who are you?' he asked. Suddenly I remembered instructions and jerked myself up into the required attitude. He saw the movement and laughed. 'Come, I said, he, 'I want to speak with you in private. I'm the bank's son.'

"I followed him substantially, and he led the way down the grand stairs, and out of the conservatory. There chanced to be no cooing lovers in the dimness of that cool retreat, and so we stood safe.

"'Who are you?' he asked a second time. 'You're not a reporter, are you? My mother's dead set against society papers.' 'No, sir!' I answered. 'Not a detective?' 'No, sir,' I said, shivering a little. 'I'm only a caterer's man.' 'That's all is it?' said he, as if he felt relieved. 'Well, but how the deuce do you look so like me? I never saw such a resemblance, as when I looked in the glass up stairs. You're no relation of mine?' 'Not that I know of,' said I. 'I'm in a dence of scrape, and you're just the man to help me out of it. Lend me your clothes, will you? Can you dance—waltz?' 'Yes,' I said, 'I can waltz as well as any one—like, I should say.' 'Good! Now, if you'll do as I tell you, and help me out of an infernal bother, I'll make it well worth your trouble. I give you my word for it, and Herbert Fremont's word has never been broken yet. I'm engaged for the next number, a valse, to a certain young lady, and I want to get out of it—for reasons of my own. I want you to take my place. I'll fix it this way: I bring her here to the conservatory and leave her with you. You will come back with the ice, and she'll never know the difference. If you waltz well, you'll have no trouble. You need say very little—small talk and compliments. You dressed so peculiarly, you can make no mistake; costume of blue and green, quite bizarre. And her name is Ida Lowerel his voice—'Miss Ritchie—Agnes Ritchie. Don't forget.' 'I won't forget,' I said. 'Ritchie and Poorey will have one value together. It's appropriate.' He grinned slightly. 'I'll tell you the rest when we meet again presently,' he said. 'You go to the supper-room and I'll come for the ice directly.' 'All right,' said I, and obeyed.

"I went out once to Taylor, and told him the bank's son required my presence for a short time in the greenhouse. Taylor was busy opening more champagne, and merely nodded as I spoke. I stood in one and passed the door, where my other self awaited me. He plucked the white carnation out from his lapel and fastened it upon my own. 'After the value, he said, 'promenade with her for a few moments, then take her back to the conservatory. Leave her there, and come for another ice, or wine, or anything, you know, and meet me here. And now, I take it you're a gentleman and barrister for the time being. I want you to accept a little—well, taking a winter coat off my back he pushed me along. 'Go on,' he said, smilingly.

"I settled the wad in my vest pocket, and hastened down the staircase. Surely, there the man was a couple dressed, in a bizarre costume of blue and green. She mentioned me to sit beside her, and spoke pettily. 'How quickly you returned, she said. Compliments and small talk, I remembered, were my instructions. 'Would you have had me stay much longer?' I asked, lowering my voice to a soft repeach.

"'You should not ask such a foolish question,' she answered, and blushed a little in a delicate, provoke-fashion. Presently she darted a sly, half-serious glance up at my face. 'Dearly!' she ejaculated. 'Oh,' I asked, to make time. 'What about Dearly?' she repeated. 'Can you ask?' I said, deprecating the question merely because I didn't know anything else to do. Who or what was Dearly? 'Yes,' she persisted, softly. 'I can ask. Because she is simply mine for—absorbing you, as I suppose I have done this evening. Or—are you have me.' Her hesitation was very pretty. 'She may be angry if she chooses,' I said, carelessly.

"Miss Ritchie tapped my arm with her fan. 'Fie!' she cried. 'Do you fancy the rumor has not reached me? 'What rumor? I asked, innocently. 'Why, the rumor of your engagement, of course. It is true, is it not?' 'Now, who could have told you such a thing?' I asked. 'A little bird, perhaps; but no matter. Do you hear the music? It is our value.

"I rose and offered her my arm, and we were soon removed from the ball-room. Mr. Herbert had been flirting with the lady, I was quite certain. And Dearly's was the name I had adopted. He was, perhaps, desirous of cordially thanking me for the assistance I had let her boldly into the dazzling light of the ball-room, and we conversed by the glimmer of the moon, as we paced leisurely together. As we paused to promenade, Dearly's name was upon my lips, but I

"He smiled, 'You've done me a great service,' said he. 'Fact is, the lady I engaged to valse me last week. To punish her, I pretended to flirt with this other one, Dearly, and carried it a little too far. I had to make it clear to her my affiancy. That's what I've been doing. If ever you want a friend—'

"'Good heavens!' I interrupted. 'Don't thank me too much. I've only been acting a worse sense for you. You told me to give her compliments and small talk.' He looked a bilindazed, and fled with the ice.

HADASSAH.

BY OSCAR F. WISNER.

And Haman's sons have met a bloody fate
In that dark hour of horror and of hate.
For Shu-Shan, the queen, had told it in the ear
Of Iran: "These sons of Haman, too, I fear."
"Then let them hang," the king with bearing proud
"On the fifty gallows, reaching to the cloud."
Then a frown came upon the air of night
In Shu-Shan's hall, now filled with beauties, bright.

Rejoicing in all the brilliant hall now glad,
And joyous guests doffs her garments sad.
But where is Vashti? where the stern cold dame,
Whose evil great Iran tried in vain to tame—
Where is she now? Alas! her place is filled
By one whose voice with honeyed accents thrilled,
As gliding through the hall of Shu-Shan fair,
She seemed like bird that carols on the air.

The Jews find rest in Persia's ancient days,
For loved the king Hadassah's pleasant ways,
And over all of Media, Persia too,
No name is heard like Mordecai, the Jew.
From lowest depths of degradation vile
When on his face was seen no happy smile,
Now side the king and next to him in power
Stood Mordecai, the Jew, in prosperous hour.

Night settles down, and all the silent skies
Of Persia's realms are filled with brilliant eyes,
And silence reigns in Shu-Shan's gilded halls,
And shadows strange now creep along its walls.
O glorious night, that watches for the day;
When all things long along life's pulsing way.
Night! sable goddess, cautions o'er the sleep
Of Persia's monarch, captive at thy feet.

But yonder come the golden streaks of day,
In long bright lines, and upward take their way;
Whilst all the stars in twinkling splendor
bright
Have hid their beams in floods of greater light.
And life again throughout the Persian realm
Is quickened as day the sombre night o'erwhelms.
Thus day and night follow each other's track
On muffled feet and ever still come back.

And Iran's monarch, looking on the past,
Rejoices now at this great feast, his last.
His ancient enemy now lies asleep,
And Mordecai no more is seen to weep.
No restless nights in Shu-Shan's starry hall,
"No air drawn dagger" threatens now his fall;
But quiet reigns o'er Persia's distant plain
Both near and far around her wide domain.

And he who sat on Persia's gilded throne,
The greatest monarch of the world then known,
Taught a great lesson—lesson such as now
Might stamp itself on each one's thoughtful brow.
This the first lesson of the kind we read,
A lesson, too, which many a home might heed;
Untaught before—but needed every day,
As o'er life's pathway tread we its slippery way.

And she who would command the hollow bark
O'er bounding billows in the midnight dark,
Must learn to navigate the waters wide
Which gird her round when on unruffled tide,
And venture not upon the stormy wave
Without a skillful hand and heart as brave.
Else mountain seas her little boat o'erwhelm,
Whilst she unnerved stands trembling at the helm.

We will not speculate, on theme like this,
Lest we, like others, too, our path should miss.
But live content, not daring to complain
Of heaven's decree, which ever is the same.
And when we undertake to alter heaven's decree,
And ask of God to bend a willing knee
To his frail mortals, made of senseless dust,
We then lose all of hope, and God, and trust.

Let each within his sphere still humble tread
The path which leads to chambers of the dead.
Let each pursue the course he deems the best,
And go through life as to a joyous feast,
And none usurp another's chosen way
Which leads him upward to a brighter day.
But all like stars, each having grades of light,
March cheerful round and gladden all the night.

* * * * * *

No longer bloom the roses, round her towers,
Breathing sweet incense from ambrosial bowers;
The sun no longer flashes down his rays
On stately spire, as once in former days.
And stars no longer pour their mellow light
Adown the sky to gladden Shu-Shan's night.
But dust and ashes, alone, of all remain,
To greet the tourist on the Persian plain.

And this sad tale of Iran's fated queen,
Will oft be read and many a tear be seen.
And many a Vashti, too, will tread the stage,
And with her lord in hot dispute engage.
And many a happy home the scene of strife,
Between the husband and once loving wife.
Thus will be acted o'er in coming time,
As sans roll 'round on flaming car sublime.

And strife and angry words will ceaseless rise
And send the clamor to the vaulted skies.
Long as the years endure, and clouds remain,
The same sad picture, looking still the same.
Once happy homes deserted now and cold,
Uncheered by love their sorrows all untold;
These homes where peace once held its halcyon reign,
Will oft repeat a mournful sad refrain.

We love this story told of Shu-Shan's hall,—
Sad tale of ancient Iran's festival.
No one can tell the fate of Vashti proud,
Nor that of him her once adored lord.
Both sleep the sleep that's found within the grave—
Peaceful they sleep,—the monarch and the slave.
And where the strains of music rose and fell,
No echo whispers o'en a last farewell.

THE END.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., July 24, 1884.

Around the County.

We want a live correspondent in every township or community in this county, to make our JOURNAL an organ of the whole county. Everything in the nature of news, business or personal interest at home or designed to advertise our resources to the state at large, is legitimate. The condition of crops, large acreage or unusual yield of any particular product, the coming in of the beauty, industry, manufactures leading to the development of any one of special interest. We wish to make this department the most valuable in the JOURNAL. Write on only one side of the paper.

East Jordan.

[This was received too late for use last week.]

Sunday morning, 13th, the Clara Belle started with an excursion party, gotten up by the Catholic society. They were not lacking in point of numbers, (about 70) but as soon as the most of them left Charlevoix, they discovered that they were awful particular about what they wanted to keep on their stomachs, and were so decidedly affected that a number came home by cars and stage.

About 30 people on Sunday morning left on the little steamer Reeves, for a ride to Bay Springs, and to take a look through the magnificent hotel at that place. All were very well pleased with the good dinner, and the courteous treatment which they received through Mr. Chapman, and arrived home in time to attend the excellent temperance lecture given in the evening at the school house, by Mr. Burnham, of Holly, Mich., who is sojourning a few days at East Jordan, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. James Stone.

Rev. Mr. Hall of near Elk Rapids, favored us with an interesting sermon last Sunday morning, and although the town looked like Goldsmith's "Deserted village," on account of the excursions, a large audience gathered to hear him and came away feeling well repaid.

East Jordan is more than well supplied at present with steamboats, no fewer than five running here. However, we can stand it if they can, and are only sorry that "trade" will not allow them to keep going and coming regularly.

The two Misses Steinman, of Grand Rapids, one of them well known in the southern part of the state, as a teacher of German, have been visiting at Mr. Glenn's.

Our school closed last Friday for the summer vacation. Mr. George Fast and Miss Alice Gleun as teachers have given the best of satisfaction.

The Good Templars are making arrangements for an entertainment.

On the 6th of June last a grocery stock was opened at the store of David Brown, the stock being furnished by a Mr. Chrisman, who comes here from Grand Rapids. The firm have not agreed all around, and to day (July 16) the Brown part of the firm closed the doors putting the keys in his pocket. The partnership will probably close by a receiver being appointed to give the Chrisman part of the firm a show.

South Arm.

Raspberries are numerous; berry-pickers ditto.

Mrs. S. G. Isamon is slowly recovering.

Mrs. J. Monroe, Jr., is quite ill.

As Mrs. Hawkes and Miss Cole were out driving recently, their horse became frightened at a wheelbarrow in the road, and became unmanageable. Both ladies were thrown out, but not seriously injured.

J. H. Vance was driving his two-year-old colt recently. The harness broke, frightening the animal, and she ran a few rods, spilling Mr. V. out. Luckily he survived to tell the tale.

Mrs. Cummins sprained her ankle descending the steps at P. L. Lanway's store.

A. Butler and grand-daughter have returned to Wisconsin.

Mrs. J. N. Smith and son, of Petoskey, are visiting relatives here.

The minister (?) who advertised a basket meeting at the Baptist church did not appear. His whereabouts are unknown.

While Mr. Miles was drawing hay, the wagon reach broke, throwing him to the ground and breaking a rib. He is recovering.

Jas. Hastings, of Charlevoix, was in town this week.

School closed Tuesday. Miss Potter has admirably sustained her reputation as a teacher.

Miss Susie Hawks, of Boyne, visited here last week.

A buggy load of our people attended the temperance lecture at East Jordan Friday evening. Notwithstanding the bad weather, a large and attentive audience was present.

Rev. Richard Tyndall has returned from his visit to Canada.

Rev. H. C. Scofield has traded his property in Echo, consisting of a sawmill, 200 acres of land, etc., for a farm in Wayne county.

Mrs. Henry Olney died last Sunday. She leaves three children, viz: James A. Kent, Mrs. Jerome Hill, and Mister Bertie; also ten grandchildren, besides numerous friends and relatives to mourn her death. She was a consistent christian, and had been a member of the M. E. church for many years. Funeral on Monday at 10 o'clock, Rev. H. C. Scofield officiating.

Ironton.

The Pine Lake Iron Co.'s furnace, makes 60 to 65 tons of iron per day.

R. M. Cherrie made Ironton a short call last Friday; left Sunday evening for Chicago.

Superintendent Hunt returned from Chicago Friday. He will repair the broken walls of those kilns which have fallen down, and make business lively in Ironton.

Capt. George Thompson has sold one-half of the North Star to C. G. Lewis, of Boyne. She has gone to Grand Haven to install the new crew, Hiram Thompson and Dennis Smith.

Foreman Reum has resigned his position at the furnace and leaves next week.

John Otis, of Mancelona, made Ironton a short call Saturday, returning Sunday evening.

Mr. T. C. Bird, who has been very sick with inflamation of the lungs, is recovering, under the management of Dr. Lewis.

No school this week on account of the teachers institute at Boyne.

Preaching at the school house last Sunday morning, by Rev. P. Blake, and evening by Rev. Mr. May.

J. G. Peterson has bought a new top buggy since his wife went visiting. Can't say who will be riding with him.

Mr. Morey has taken a contract to get the wood off one hundred and sixty acres near Stripp's dock for the Pine Lake Iron Co.

Look out for a Cleveland and Hendricks pole and flag at Ironton next week.

Burgess.

School has closed in district No. 4, on account of several severe cases of chilblain.

James Bartlett addressed the greenback meeting held at Gilman school house, after which a Butler club was organized with the following officers: President, Oscar Tillotson; secretary, James H. Meers; treasurer, Joseph Lewis.

Buz On Skates.

Buz is unable to say how much longer the roller skate craze will consume the attention, the brains and the pockets of the people of this nation. Whether it will in a brief period of time take its place in that mysterious realm from whose bourne no traveler returns, by the side of the great fifteen puzzle, or the Bidwell trust company, is a question of considerable moment, and is one which is agitating the minds of the people to an alarming extent. But whether its existence be long or short, whether this big thing on wheels runs itself into the ground in short order or continues for ages to distract public attention and warp people's perceptive powers and reasoning faculties, Buz wishes to be distinctly understood that no tongue, be it ever so persuasive, male or female, can prevail on him to put on a pair of roller skates.

He was prevailed upon once by allowing his sympathetic nature to be worked upon, and out of generosity to the cause and a desire to advance the science a pair was strapped on and well oiled. Buz had all confidence in the world that he would make a success of it, and flattered himself he "could glide through the air with the greatest of ease, like the daring young man on the flying trapeze," for he had always thought if a girl could stand on a piece of steel the thickness of a knitting needle and cut curley cues on the ice without coming in hard contact with frozen solidity, it would be no trick at all to roll around on eight wheels. But alas how quickly are bright hopes blasted and fond anticipations shattered, how suddenly the heart yearns over blighted prospects and what a keen sense of disgrin mortifies the hitherto benign countenance.

To much oil must have been poured into the axles, for they run so easy that when Buz straightened up he rolled backward like a streak of lightning, expecting every minute to receive a severe concussion of the posterior extremity of the skull, but a friendly hand stayed his progress and progress and he lit out across the hall with every evidence that he would outstrip a Morgan or a Petoskey, but the rollers curved him in one to the right and the other to the left, bringing up at the middle of the hall in another circus position.

It was a pic nic for the boys and girls, but it was the breaking up of one to Buz. He soon struck a position, however, and again got under good headway, prying himself that he was getting the thing down fine, and consoling himself with anticipations of notoriety in the future, when he should be sent for to give exhibitions as a champion skater. He flew around the hall several times on a recess scoot, with coat off, wiping the perspiration from his neck and face, having never sweat so on a wood pile or in a harvest field in his life.

He thought best to stop and take a rest. He tried to slow up, but the wheels would'nt slow. Their velocity was greater than Buz's equilibrium and they went from under him quicker than a cat. His heels flew into mid air, and he struck solid in a sitting posture, bounding like a rubber foot ball about two feet vaulted with the floor, landing again in the same place. The sudden jar knocked his hat off, which flew some distance and was picked up by willing hands.

With feelings of regret mingled with mortification and anxiety Buz arose from his ungraceful position, unlashed his skates and made weak attempts to make believe he was not hurt, but no individual can make a dent in a hardwood floor by falling upon it and come forth unscathed. Buz had rather take his chances on being run through a threshing machine or carried through a grist mill by the patent roller process than to again put on the modern skate.—Rockford Register.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

HENRY C. PEDDER, manager for Arnold, Constable & Co., of New York, has transferred his valuable New Jersey property to the firm, from whom he has embezzled, it is alleged, between $100,000 and $500,000. Herbert Seymour, the confidential book-keeper of the company, is said to be a defaulter in the sum of $50,000. Mrs. C. E. Browne, the mother of Artemus Ward, died recently at Waterford, Me., in her 78th year. . . Five suspected cases of cholera in New York proved to be summer complaint among children. A company has been formed to build and operate a public crematory, to be heated with natural gas, on the outskirts of Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE assignment of Tucker, Hammond & Co., jobbers of small wares, at Boston, is announced. Liabilities, $100,000. The private bank of G. Hall, at Elmira, N. Y., patronized by business men, laborers and farmers, has failed. The deposits are reported at about $180,000.

SWEENEY, pitcher of the Providence Base Ball Club, refused to obey orders on the field, abused the manager, and was expelled. The trial of a certain Talbot club magnate is alleged to have prompted Sweeney's action. Several large storehouses and factories were destroyed by fire at Glassboro, Mass. the losses are estimated at half a million dollars. . . Jane Grey Swisshelm, the well-known abolitionist and advocate of woman's rights, died last week at her home in Sewickley, Pa., in her 69th year. . . Grant & Ward's receiver has been empowered to sue all persons who borrowed money from the firm.

TWO PERSONS died recently at Aristo, Hamilton County, N. Y., and many other persons were taken sick, from eating bean obtained from a local butcher, who says it came from Thorn & Co., of Chicago. An analysis of the bean shows that it contained trichinæ. It appears that the person who died used the meat in partly cooked state. A workman at Gloucester, Mass., discovered a spark in a bucket of dynamite cartridges which he was carrying. Hurling the bucket from him, it struck a tree, and the explosion which followed shook houses for blocks around, and demolished windows.

D. Rose, Sons & Co., agricultural implement manufacturers at Mount Joy, Pa., have failed for $16,000.

THE WEST.

THE village of Cedar Springs, Mich., was destroyed by fire, four persons losing their lives. . . A damage of $20,000 was done by fire at the saw-mill of John White, at Ottawa, Ill. . . Four men had their lives in a fire at Toledo. . . A. J. C. S. Harrison, the Indianapolis bankers, suspended last week, the firm applying for a receiver. Two of the firm proposed declined to act, and the Sheriff was placed in possession. The deposits are between $500,000 and $600,000, a large amount of which is trust, and $40,000 city funds. . . Cotter, Beattie & Co., general merchandise and lumber manufacturers at Ovid, Mich., are insolvent. . . The commission firm of Harson, Spruance & Co., of Chicago, has suspended. A shortage in corn amounting to 1,000,000 bushels is said to be the cause of the failure.

A HELENA (Montana) dispatch says that five horse-thieves, whose names are unknown, were hanged at Rocky Point, on the Missouri River, by a band of cowboys, organized for the purpose of cleaning out the thieves infesting that section. Thirty-two stolen horses were recovered. This makes a total of thirteen horse-thieves hanged and shot in the Judith and Musselshell valleys within the past three weeks.

JUDGE BRENNEMAN, of Mason City, Iowa, has decided that the prohibition law of the state is constitutional. At Muscatine a similar decision has been rendered, but an appeal has been taken. The owners of 50,000 head of cattle in Oklahoma have formed a pool to reduce the expense of taking care of herds, and will employ one man and eight horses to every thousand head. . . By a boiler explosion at Mount Vernon, Ohio, two tramps sleeping in a blacksmith shop near the house were killed—one named John Carey and the other unknown. . . Sawyer, who was hanged at Hamburg, Ia., in the presence of 2,000 spectators, for the murder of John Martin, at Tarn Hamus Parish, The culprit remained firm to the last. . . Sam Williams, a colored man, was executed at Waynesboro, Ga., for the murder of Clem Brown.

MARTINEZ, editor of the New Orleans Standard, the organ of the colored Republicans of Louisiana, recently arrested on Custom House officials of sending gangs to Fort Jackson and Logan Club meetings. Dupont, the Naval Officer of the New Orleans Port, resented these statements, and meeting Martinez the other day, angry words were exchanged, which led to a rough-and-tumble fistic encounter. Both were considerably damaged. Some of the adherents of Martinez and Dupont renewed the row at a later hour, and considerable blood was spilt.

A RECEIVER has been appointed for Green's Bank, at Jackson, Miss. Inability to secure a loan on ample security caused the trouble. The bank holds deposits for most of the Mississippi Sheriffs, and the failure will result in much inconvenience.

NEAR Charleston, Mo., two thousand men engaged in a riot at a negro campmeeting, in which one person was killed, ten fatally injured, and a number of others seriously cut. A dispatch from Charleston gives the following particulars of the bloody affair: Excursions were run to Charleston for a meeting in Jarrette's Woods, near Norton station, in three counties, from several points in Maryland and Delaware. From Millington, in the latter State, came a crowd of men who had a feud with the negroes of this vicinity. The 3,000 negroes on the grounds had been drinking whisky all day, and were in a good humor for a fight. One of the Millington men commenced trifling with the horse of a negro from this town and precipitated a row, in which 200 men participated, which lasted nearly three quarters of an hour and during which fully one thousand shots were fired. The men became thoroughly infuriated and carried on a guerilla warfare from behind trees until a Sheriff's posse, two hundred strong, charged through the woods into the center of the camp. The newcomers had arrived by special trains from Ohio towns, and promptly scattered the rioters right and left, continuing the chase for miles. Thirty-two miles away, at Millington, was found dying with a bullet through his body, Reuben Ingersoll, one of the Millington men, who had been shot freely, and nearly every man captured was bleeding profusely from wounds inflicted by these weapons. Many of the Millington party were shot hot, but escaped. About ten men were fatally wounded.

MORRIS OLIVER, one of Mahone's Lieutenants at Warrenton, Va., stole a box containing $41,000 from the residence of Mr. C. P. Cooper and left it in a boy-stack, where it was found the next day. . . The Zell Circus Company, performing at Mount Lemont, near Baltimore, were entirely destroyed by fire. The insurance amounts to $85,000.

COL. T. W. COLE, of Nashville, Tenn., has purchased the greater portion of Leaksville Mountain, and intends to set engineers to work on a survey from Chattanooga to the summit, after the model of the Mount Washington Road.

WASHINGTON.

THE President has issued the following proclamation:

Write guarantine regulations are committed to the several States, the General Government has proved certain powers in the President to be invoked his discretion in preventing a threatened epidemic. Feeling it his duty, I hereby call upon the Governors of the States and Territories to put forth their powers against threatened epidemic. With the cessation of quarantine, it is to be hoped that the danger is at an end, but prior to the introduction of the pestilence in Europe, it was the duty of the Chief Magistrate to advise of the coming of the epidemic, and to call upon the States to do their duty. Experience has proved that the efforts of the States and towns of the United States, whether acting alone or on the lines of inter-commerce, by sound quarantine regulations and the enforcement of them, have prevented the importation of the contagious diseases of Europe, and I further direct the Governors of the local States in the place where the pestilence may make its way, make it a duty to see to the enforcement of the carrying out of the instructions in whatever form, and in whatever way the Governors of the local States may consider the exercise of value relative to the purpose of the Union. CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has called for the resignation of Gen. Longstreet, United States Marshal of the District of Georgia. Attorney General Brewster complains of Longstreet's inefficiency and neglect, and has recommended his removal. Mr. John E. Bryant, it is thought, will succeed Longstreet.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR received a message from Queen Victoria, in which she congratulates the United States on the rescue of Lieut. Greely and his surviving companions. The President returned a suitable reply thanking the Queen, and again expressing appreciation of the sympathy of the Alert. He informed the Queen that the survivors are doing well.

POLITICAL.

THE Kansas Democratic State Convention will meet at Topeka Aug. 29, to nominate candidates for State officer. It is said that Senator Mahone will endeavor to enjoin the Secretary of State from issuing poll-books under the new apportionment, claiming that the message failed to pass the Legislature by a two-thirds vote.

INDEPENDENT Republicans from several States gathered in New York on the 23d for a conference. George William Curtis called the meeting to order, and Charles R. Codman was chosen President. The letter called the nomination of Blaine unwise in American manhood. Thomas Hayes said the Republicans had twice defeated the aspirations of Blaine within the party. A platform was adopted declaring that the abuses of the past cannot be corrected under the leadership of the Republican party alone, and it was unanimously decided to support Cleveland and Hendricks.

IN the Sixth Iowa District Convention at Ottumwa the Democrats nominated Gen. Weaver for Congress. The Greenbackers' convention, held at the same time, also nominated Weaver.

PETER KEARNY, the New York banker, has been nominated by the New York Democratic Committee for Presidential electors-at-large, ex-William Purcell, of Rochester, resigned.

GENERAL.

THE National Educational Association, which drew six thousand teachers to Madison, Wis., elected Prof. Louis Soldan, of St. Louis, President. A plea for the education of women in the South, made by Miss Clara Conway, of Memphis, attracted more attention than any paper presented at the sessions. Superintendent Cupel delivered a brief address. . . During the week there were 192 failures in the United States and twenty-three in Canada, the total in both countries the previous week was 198. . . London dispatch states that the 23-year-old daughter of Matthew Arnold is engaged to be married to Frederick Wickham, a New York lawyer.

A CORRESPONDENT of a London journal, who was sent to investigate the commercial resources of Mexico, reports having been set upon by robbers while returning from his journey, but he learns that he killed his assailant. . . The chicken scare is materially allaying European fears.

MANITOBA, with a vastly increased acreage of wheat, promises yield and a good crop. . . The Clearing House exchanges last week—$686,775,112—were $12,903,877 greater than the previous week; and when compared with the returns for the corresponding week in 1883 show a decrease of 32.6 per cent.

THE Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company has announced a reduction of rates on all important Southern and Western points. The lines in question are roads far south—almost half the present Western Union charge. . . John C. Eno, who wrecked New York Banker Sun rented a furnished house in Quebec, and has been joined by his wife and family.

ALEXANDER SULLIVAN, President of the Irish National League, has called a convention at Boston for Aug. 19, on which occasion addresses will be delivered by Thomas Sexton and John E. Redmond.

FOREIGN.

THERE was a great demonstration of the English trades unionists and agricultural laborers in London to condemn the action of the House of Lords in rejecting the franchise bill. . . Some serious disorders occurred, flags bearing mottoes expressing approval of Bradlaugh's course and mourning the Peers. The streets were thronged with demonstrators marched on its way to Hyde Park. Speeches were made, and agricultural laborers were loudly cheered. At Hyde Park the crowd was much enlarged by several noted Radicals. Resolutions were adopted denouncing the House of Lords as the enemy of the people, approving Bradlaugh, and expressing warm approval of Mr. Bright's political course. . . Philip Callahan, who was made a Freemason in England in 1861, has just died, in the age of 43. A fire at Wappping, England, destroyed $200,000 worth of dock property. . . Officers have been made in Dublin in connection with the Dublin corporation bribery scandal. . . Dr. Cassar Henry Hawkins, an eminent English surgeon, is dead.

THE cholera epidemic at Toulon and Marseilles shows no indication of abating, says a cable dispatch. A panic was created at Toulon by the arrival of 100 coffins ordered from Marseilles. In order to allay the excitement it was found necessary to send the coffins back. The Russian Government has issued a circular to all the frontier railway stations against the importation of rags, and forbidden the importation of rags from Turkey and the Spanish Government has established a strong quarantine against Algiers. Cases of cholera are reported to have occurred at Furio, Tetuan, and Madrid.

A CABLE at the Wapping docks, London, swept away property valued at $2,500,000. About 1,000 tons of pepper, nearly one-third of the entire stock in London, was destroyed.

IT is probable that the conference of the European powers on the Egyptian question will result in nothing. France refuses to agree to Great Britain's original proposals. It is not likely that the conference will meet again, although Lord Granville is empowered to call the members together at any time.

The steamers Gifen and Latham collided off Corunna, Spain, and both sunk almost immediately. Fifty-six persons were landed, and it is believed that no lives were lost. . . John John of Abyssinia has issued his purpose to abolish slavery and the slave trade in his dominions. The chicken has appeared at Brignolen and other points in the south of France.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

THE French Academy of Medicine proposes an international congress to discuss the prevention and cure of cholera. Dr. Koch has asked that the congress meet in Berlin. A Marseilles dispatch says: "The expert here is becoming sanitier. The steamer which arrives weekly from Algeria is supposed. The line to Spain is stopped. The South American packets have ceased to call here. The cholera-afflicted and panic-stricken. There are so many funerals during the night, the hearses being returned to the end of the terrace. The Mayor has interdicted the annual fair, and forbidden the procession of long life."

AN organization under the name of the Miners' Amalgamated Association is being perfected in the bituminous and anthracite coal regions of Pennsylvania and Ohio. It is estimated that membership of 100,000 men will have been obtained. The organization will be extended to the West. The leaders claim it will be productive in energy, and that strikes will be discouraged as far as is consistent with the interests of the miners.

IN the National Prohibition Convention at Pittsburgh, a Maryland delegate stated that the administration had sent the Commissioners of Pensions and Indian Affairs to advise the members against separating from the party. R. H. McDonald of California, John P. St. John, of Kansas, and others were placed in nomination for President, but the overwhelming sentiment in favor of the latter caused him to be accepted by acclamation as the candidate. Gen. Samuel Dickey, of Maryland, was nominated for Vice President. The platform favors the abolition of internal revenue taxes on liquors and tobacco, and declares that the Republican party has placed in the hands of women for her protection. Two Prohibition State Conventions were held in Michigan, one in favor of joining hands with the Republicans and the other against. The latter nominated Gen. Fairchild for Governor, and adopted the national ticket and platform.

Organized at Cedar Rapids and Connellsville, Pa., has been destroyed by fire. The loaded cars have at least, containing upward of 1,000 barrels of oil, burned. The loss on Cleveland alone was $115,000, and on the whole $350,000. Both the engines and oil were fully insured. A number of these who collected during the fire found a quantity of the whiskey in Brown from the wreck of the train, and have since gone off in a drunken condition.

RESCUED JUST IN TIME.

Lieut. Greeley and Six of His Party Found Off Cape Sabine, in Smith's Sound.

The Remainder of the Party Killed by Cold and Starvation—Terrible Tales of Suffering.

The following dispatch from Commander Schley to the Secretary of the Navy tells the story of the rescue of Lieut. Greeley and his six surviving companions:

ST. JOHNS, N. F., July 22.

The Hon. William E. Chandler, Secretary of the Navy, Washington:

Thetis, Alert, and Look Out arrived here today from West Greenland. All well. Have rescued Lieut. Greeley and six men at Cape Sabine at 2 p. m. June 22, the survivors of the Polaris, in Smith's Sound, the Thetis and Alert leaving Lieut. A. W. Greely, Sergt. Brainard, Sergt. Fredericks, Sergt. Long, Henry Rissel Schlichter, Frederick Connell, and Joseph Ellison, the only survivors of the party (making the number of souls saved 13) at Cape Sabine, Smith's Sound, with provisions for 60 days. Ice in Smith's Sound, Lieut. Greeley's dispatches, three days ahead. Impossible to reach them. Severe weather. Remains of twenty-five persons composing the expedition perished by starvation and cold. Lieut. Greeley's dispatches will be forwarded by mail. Schley.

Lieut. Greeley and his party were found in a very low state of vitality. Lieut. Greeley, in a long dispatch to the Secretary of the Navy, says that the Lieutenant Commander Schley, of the Thetis, on reaching Disco, found that the Look Out had left for home, and that the Alert was ready to sail. Lieut. Greeley's dispatches continue: Lieutenant Commander Schley, of the Thetis, on reaching Disco, found that the Look Out had left for home, and that the Alert was ready to sail. Lieut. Greeley's dispatches continue: Lieutenant Commander Schley, of the Thetis, on reaching Disco, would have been taken to sea against my wishes, but for the fact that I was so low that I could not stand without assistance. I am now improving.

Democratic Nominations.

For President—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

For Vice President—
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, of Indiana.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic State Convention to nominate candidates for state officers, and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of other business will be held in the City of Grand Rapids, in Powers' Opera Hall, on TUESDAY, AUGUST 26, 1884, at 12 o'clock noon.

Congressmen, at Large, Members, Delegates, and all voters of this state, irrespective of party, who believe in a tariff for revenue only, who are in favor of a reform in places and a purer administration of government, and all who favor a reduction of tariff taxation, and a reform of our tariff laws, are cordially invited to participate in sending delegates to this convention.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 1000 votes cast for Governor at the last general election, and one for every fraction of not less than 250 votes. Every organized county is entitled to at least two delegates, and under the rule adopted a delegate must be a resident of the county he represents.

H. F. PENNOYER, Secretary. JEROME EDDY, Chairman.

Charlevoix county is entitled to two delegates.

Notes and News.

Niles has a Cleveland and Hendricks club with 300 names.

Gen. A. M. West declines to serve as candidate for vice president on the ticket with Gen. Butler.

The Cedar Springs Clipper gives a four column account of the fire in that village, footing up losses to the amount of $162,000.

It is stated that the Cleveland scandal finds no circulation and support in Buffalo, save in a characteless rag devoted to sensation and calumny. Respectable republican papers dare not print it, and while they apparently deprecate its circulation, they are doing all they can with it to defeat Mr. Cleveland.

Touching the slanders against the private life of Grover Cleveland, after quoting a few of the silly explanations of thick and thin republican sheets, the Chicago Herald says: "Scribes, pharisees and hypocrites! The authors and circulators of this calumny know full well that it cannot and will not be answered. True or false, it will stand as they have uttered it. No reputable person in Buffalo, the scene of the romance, can be found to father it. Every one who has been questioned concerning it professes ignorance or disbelief. It may be an invention or it may not. As to that it matters little. It is a charge which it is easy to make, and of which disproof is out of the question. To attempt an answer would involve the subject of the report, though he was chaste as ice, in an endless maze of scandal."

The truly good republican protection twilight organ in Detroit holds up its hands in holy horror if a rival distances it in publishing a scandalous or sensational story, and sells a few extra papers; but its revelations last week prove that its manager is human. For a pairy fee his columns are disgraced, and in a subsequent issue he makes a weak attempt to justify himself by saying "the public demand the news." The press comes to be a conservator of public morals when it panders to the lowest elements of society. This may serve its purpose as a campaign slander, but its author will become a partisan in the minds of the people, and will cease to command the respect due an independent journal, as it has paraded itself in the past. It strives to become the circulating medium of a mess of vile stuff it once denounced in other journals, and now violates its promises made to the public when it was established. The story will injure no one more than the scurrilous journals that give it circulation.

Nature Cleanses

The system, if given an opportunity, but very few persons find time to give nature a chance and so the blood, which is the great drain for carrying away impurities, becomes so clogged with disease that unless some help is given it, the person will be afflicted by blood poisoning and suffer with pimples, boils, carbuncles, eancers, scrofula, &c., and often die without help. Save yourself from all this suffering and loss of time by using Parmelee's Blood Purifier which prevents all diseases in the system. Large bottles $1.00. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

Rev. Geo. S. Hickey, of Ionia, and Abram Allen, of Lansing, came over from Bay View, on the Friant, Monday morning to visit friends here and look over our resorts. We were remembered with others.

The annual meeting for election of officers of the Charlevoix W. C. T. U. will be held at the Congregational parsonage, on Friday, Aug. 1, at 3 p. m. It is desired that every member of the union be present.

Half fare excursions to Petoskey will be given on the Friant, Clara Belle, Queen of the Lakes, and perhaps others next Sunday. The Paxton will carry at half rate, Saturday night and return Monday morning.

H. F. Pennington, wife and two sons, of Charlotte, were in Charlevoix this week. Mr. P. is secretary of the democratic state central committee, and is sanguine of the election of Cleveland and Hendricks this fall.

Dr. M. L. Leach and W. S. Holdsworth, of Traverse City, gave the JOURNAL a call on Saturday. They were on their way to Petoskey for two weeks' recreation, the former searching for fossils, the latter sketching.

Dr. J. W. Hagadorn and wife, of Lansing, and Dr. Hugge, of Portland, accompanied the steamer Friant on her first trip to Charlevoix. They were on their way to visit friends at Harbor Point and Bay View, and devoted an hour or two to looking over our resorts, etc.

Last Saturday morning lightning struck three buildings in Charlevoix, the Chicago club house, John O'Neil's house, and Geo. Wrisley's house. At the first named place, several occupants were considerably stunned, and about $100 damage was done to the building.

P. Karlskin, of Advance, gave us a call on Monday. Crops look well in his vicinity. Harvest has just begun, and winter wheat will average 18 to 20 bushels per acre. Fruit promises well. Cherries a full crop, now in their prime, and apples doing well. The recent rains will help corn and potatoes.

Holcomb & Robertson's young ladies band is advertised for one entertainment at the opera house Saturday evening. This is a company of talented young ladies, who have won many words of praise from the state press. Miss Jessie Smith, well known to many of our people, is one of the company.

Last Thursday evening Mrs. R. A. Campbell organized a local branch, of the women's foreign missionary society, under the management of the ladies of the Charlevoix M. E. church, with 21 charter members. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Mrs. C. J. Strang; vice presidents, Mrs. J. T. Hidings, and Mrs. O. Cooper; recording secretary, Mrs. Barnes; corresponding secretary, Mrs. O. S. Washburn; treasurer, Miss Sarah Inwood; literary committee, Miss Esther Buttars, Mrs. Oscar Upright, and Mrs. E. H. Green. The next meeting will be at Mrs. E. H. Green's on Friday, Aug. 8. All ladies interested are invited to be present.

Geo. Warren, of Austin, Texas, visited with O. D. Hilton last week. He is an old locomotive engineer, and 30 years ago, he and Hilton ran together on the Rock Island route. He has since been on the N. U. C. the U. P. and other western roads, and is now running from Austin to Hunipsteal, Texas. This climate is too cold for him, and he returns home in a few days, via Indianapolis.

Lucien Eaton and son Frank, of St. Louis, Mo., C. A. Coryell, of Grand Rapids, and G. M. Cleyhorn, of Chicago, guests at Tourists' Home, went over to Bear Lake to fish with hook and line, and returned with one weighing 14 pounds, two at 6 pounds each, one at 5¼, besides a large number of smaller ones. [Our reporter did not furnish the entire number caught, nor the kind of these large ones.] These were all caught by Frank Eaton.

The Ladies' Cornet Band appeared at Armory hall last evening to a large and select audience. The elite of the city were out to greet them, and all enjoyed a very pleasant evening, for the ladies seemed to vie with each other in their attempt to please their audience. The band are a fine looking company of young ladies, and it is not to be wondered at that they have so many admirers wherever they appear.—Big Rapids Daily Enterprise.

Thomas Friant.

This is the name of a new steamer just launched at Grand Haven, by Capt. Reuben Vanderhoef, for the excursion and coast trade. She is 95 feet keel, 18 feet beam, 8 feet hold. Her machinery is entirely new and very powerful. Capt. Vanderhoef came to Charlevoix last Thursday to look over our trade, and has decided to run between here and Harbor Springs two trips a day, besides evening and Sunday excursions. Her time from Petoskey to Charlevoix last Friday morning was one hour and 25 minutes, and we understand even this has since been shortened. This week the boat has been quite well patronized by resorters, which we hope to see continued. This route will be a positive benefit to Charlevoix to the extent of bringing resorters here from Petoskey and Harbor Springs, who would not come on either of the other boats with their present running time. It also gives business men an opportunity to go from place to place, transact business and return the same day. We hope it will prove a profitable route for the boat.

M. E. Church.

M. E. church, Pastor and Congregation, most cordially invite all strangers, and resorters, to participate in the services held each Sabbath, morning and evening. All who are not otherwise engaged, will be welcomed; with the insurance, that a pleasant time, will be had. The Sabbath school, is quite a factor, in the enjoyableness of each Sabbath service.

J. T. Inman, Pastor.

SAVINGS BANK OF CHARLEVOIX.

Deposits of TEN CENTS AND UPWARD received. We will loan money on Real Estate, and pay 7 per cent. Interest on time deposits in this department.

REASONS. First, we have $4000 in Bank Stock. Second, Stockholders are liable for security to depositors. Stockholders are of good standing and responsible. Third, Savings Banks, or other State Banks, offer no security to depositors. Fourth, Savings Banks only secure their billholders, and not their depositors; and that is often fictitious. National banks are under U. S. control, and are safe. Fifth, It is foolish, and with our friends, it is criminal.

Given out with silken fashion—
Just the tip to make a catch.

Freshly lady coming toward him;
He prepares to make a mash;
Meets a shoulder, knee on crossing,
Mad bites o'er him with a splash.

Man who looked so sweet and gentle,
Like a little suckling lamb,
Now becomes a raving lion—
Girl goes sly mell bears him a—n.

Girl is shocked beyond expressing;
Vows he's not the man she thought;
Yet believes that she her sole blame—
Meets him at time with a smile.

Man apologizes humbly;
Says his anger made him rash.
Girl replies it is convinced her
He's a man of proper stash.

THE DOCTOR'S ADVENTURE.

BY SARA H. BOSS.

[The following story is a true one, with the exception of the names, which are slightly changed, as there are descendants of some of the characters still living in the city of Buffalo. The conversations no one could be sure of at this time.]

It was during the war known as the war of 1812 that Dr. Anthony Chartre was practising medicine in the city of Buffalo, if it could then be called a city. He was a dashing young bachelor, and had turned the heads of more than one of the belles of the town; but had at last succumbed to the charms of a fair damsel, Miss Jennie St. Jarvis, a niece of the widow St. Jarvis, who had a large mansion upon one of the principal streets.

The Doctor, however, was troubled a little with bashfulness, and had deferred making a proposal from time to time, until one day he had determined he would not leave his divinity until he had put the question and knew what his fate was to be.

He had, however, but just seated himself by the fair girl's side, when a knock was heard upon the door of the parlor in which he sat. When the door was opened a 12-year-old boy was disclosed, who asked in a frightened voice,

"Is Dr. Chartre here?"

"He is," replied Miss Jennie.

"Val," said he, hurriedly, "there is a man up south what's broke his leg, and he wants the Doctor to come right off and set it."

The Doctor swallowed his chagrin, and asked:

"How far is it?"

"Most a little south of the corners. He told me to come right along with you, sir."

"Very well; I will get my horse immediately."

He made his adieus to the young lady in a very cooler manner, and was soon upon his way, with the tow-headed urchin as a guide. It was a beautiful day, the air was clear and bracing, and the young Doctor sang and whistled on his way, regardless of the open mouth and eyes of the astonished lad.

They had ridden at least ten miles when the boy turned aside from the road down a wooded lane, saying: "This way, mister."

The Doctor followed and soon came in sight of a neat-looking block house and a large log barn, where a pair of patient oxen stood chewing their cuds in the yellow sunlight. The clearing sloped in a gentle incline to the shores of Lake Erie, which could not have been more than a half mile distant.

It was a beautiful spot, and the Doctor stopped for a moment to admire the grove of graceful pine trees which on one side grew almost up to the door of the cabin.

He then rapped lightly and the door was opened by a slender young girl with dark grey eyes, and a wealth of beautiful golden hair, which was worn in heavy braids wound round and round the well-shaped head.

She was clad in the homespun linen garments of the time, and was devoid of all the little fripperies which characterize the dress of the young ladies of the town.

"The Doctor?" she asked, in a low, sweet voice.

The Doctor bowed his head in response.

"Step this way then," said the girl, leading the way, through the low red door which led into a small chamber.

The sufferer was a man in the prime of life, and was bearing his pain with the quiet of a hero. His wife was by his side, and the two women stood by when the fractured limb was set, and ministered to the needs of the patient or assisted the Doctor with perfect calmness and self-possession. When all was over Mrs. Atwood said, "You must wait for supper, Doctor; Dolly will have it ready in a few moments."

The Doctor decided to wait, for he was feeling hungry, as he had missed his dinner and it was now nearly 4 o'clock.

He sat watching the graceful girl as she prepared the large white potatoes for the oven, and fried the silvery fish fresh from the lake near by, and before he was aware of it, he found himself comparing her with the sprightly lass somewhat affected Jennie St. Jarvis, and it must be said his comparisons were not in favor of the latter young lady.

It was 6 o'clock when he again remounted his horse, and when he reached the main road he was surprised to see it filled with men, women, and children, all hurrying southward in the greatest state of excitement and alarm.

"What is the matter?" he asked, in astonishment, of a lady with whom he was acquainted.

"Oh, Doctor," was the reply, "fly for your life; the British and Indians are in Buffalo, breaking open the stores and pillaging the houses, and not a soldier this side of Batavia."

And she hurried on without stopping for further words.

The Doctor was in a quandary. He had left behind him in his office a large sum of money in gold, and he disliked to lose it greatly, and as his office was in a retired part of the city, he resolved to proceed carefully, and, if possible, recover the letter if fell into the hands of the enemy.

He questioned some others, and found that the town was almost entirely deserted, and that these were the very last of the flying people, who had started all in every direction. He just spun to his horse, but the shades of night so often took him before he had half accomplished his journey, and the light of burning buildings began to light up the darkness of the evening.

He hurriedly rode on, however, and by avoiding the half-drunken soldiery, and the painted red demons, who had congregated around Bert's large store, which they had ransacked and then set fire to, he managed to reach his office without being seen, and found that it had not been broken into. He secreted his money upon his person, filled his medicine case to its fullest extent, putting in his pockets several bottles of the best brandy, and was about to endeavor to steal away as he had come, when he was accosted by a red-faced English captain and two horribly painted Indians.

"Ahs, my boy, you're our prisoner," said the Englishman, patting him upon the shoulder.

"Deliver up your arms, and tell us where there may be any little valuables; this building will be ashes in half an hour."

"I am not armed," replied the Doctor, "and as to my pills, you may swallow them all, if you like."

"A sassy-lass, oh! Here, Englet; and you, Blackchief, take this fellow to the Colonel, upon the square."

The Doctor was marched off between the two Indians, but the Colonel was not found upon the square, but in the house of the widow St. Jarvis, who was cooking a supper for the English officers, and whose house was filled with silks and merchandise from the various stores of the plundered town.

The lady and her niece, Miss Jennie St. Jarvis, seemed to be in the best of spirits when the Doctor was led in between the two Indians. The latter lady was joking with the Englishmen about the flying Yankees, and the younger was pronouncing up and down the hall with the officer for whom they were waiting. The officer was quite the familiarity of old friends, and the attention of the other was thrown lightly aboot the lady's slender waist.

"Ah, Doctor," said Mrs. St. Jarvis, "So you couldn't keep pace with the others and got captured."

The Doctor made no reply was a frigid bow, and one of the Indians, Englet, leaving him, touched the arm of the officer who was waiting and talking St. Jarvis.

"A prisoner did you say? Where is he?" said the officer, pausing.

The Indian pointed to Dr. Chartre, and the Colonel came forward, still with his arm about Miss Jennie's waist. She colored slightly when she saw the Doctor, but she said no word and endeavored to appear as if she was an utter stranger.

"Are you a surgeon, sir?" asked the Colonel.

"I am," replied Dr. Chartre.

"Very well," was the reply. "You may take him across the river, men, and have him attend to these fellows who were wounded this afternoon, and then take him to Col. Harker."

The Indians resumed their silent march, and the Doctor was hurried through the burning town, and bore the insults of the hilarious soldiery and Indians with stern, set lips, and disdained to say a word in reply.

At the shore Englet again left them, but very soon returned with a strong but light canoe. The Doctor was placed in the center seat, and, with an Indian in each end, the canoe started to go down the river for a short distance, and then to cross the river to the Canadian side. As soon as they were well started, the Doctor drew from his pocket a bottle of brandy, and, knowing out the cork, was about to pretend to drink, when Englet said: "Ugh, no take."

The Doctor handed him the bottle in a reluctant manner, and then took another from his pocket, which was quickly snatched from his hand by the silent Blackchief, and the Doctor had the gratification of seeing them both take long and hearty drinks of the strong liquor.

It was not long before Englet began an excited and drunken quarrel with his companion, who responded in with short, sulky answers in the most defiant tone; tomahawks were brandished, and the Doctor feared he was in greater danger than before, but in a short time the liquor did its expected work upon Englet and he fell in a drunken slumber, face downward, in the bottom of the canoe.

The Doctor moved slightly to bring Blackchief directly under his eye, but he saw by the fierce exclamation and uplifted tomahawk that it would be a perilous business to attack him unarmed, and his heart almost sank within him as he saw the lights on the Canadian shore momentarily grow nearer and nearer.

However, to his intenest joy, he saw the Indian again apply the bottle to his lips, and the Doctor saw in a few moments that his stroke grew unsteady, and, striving hard against the potent liquor, the Indian bent every energy to his paddling, but in vain; his hand slipped from the oar, his head began to nod, and, seizing the fellow bodily, the Doctor threw him overboard into the stream. He then turned his attention to Englet, who was snoring loudly in the bottom of the canoe. To deal with him as he had the other was only the work of a moment, and then the Doctor seized the paddle, and, with a sigh of relief, started to paddle out of reach far up the lake.

He was still in the greatest danger, for the water was lit up for miles with the light of the burning town, and canoes were crossing to and fro every few minutes.

The Doctor, however, was wary, and managed to elude them all; and morning found him exhausted and many miles up in about the centre of the lake. The wind had his canoe toward the American shore, and as he worked his way slowly along with his blistered hands, he thought of the women he once thought he had loved, false to her country, false to him—and worse than all—false to her own womanly modesty.

He gained his quiet, lonely shore at about 10 o'clock in the day. A forest of middle-sized pine trees came down to the water's edge, and the Doctor pressed his canoe and climbed upon the little ledge which bordered the shore. About half a mile inland he saw a black cabin and a large log barn by which stood two yoke of oxen, with their yoks in the sun. Could it be possible? Yes, it was the cabin of Mr. Atwood, the man whose limb he had set the day before, but which seemed repaired to the extent of being used by Doctor.

He made his way to the cabin and met Dolly Atwood at the door, who gave him the welcome information that the soldiers had arrived from Batavia, and the British and Indians had evacuated the smoking ruins of what had once been called Buffalo.

The Doctor stayed with the hospitable farmer until his limb was nearly well, but regarded with Dolly Atwood he rode into the town a week after it was burnt, and saw that the house of the per fidious Miss St. Jarvis was almost the only building left standing.

When he set up his office in newly built Buffalo Dolly Atwood came to him.

Miss St. Jarvis returned to her home in the East shortly afterward, having learned by the coldness of the young people who once were her friends, that her treachery was known; but the Doctor's marriage was the worst blow to her pride, for between two stools she had met with a fall, as she never met the English Colonel afterward.

A Crick in the Back.

If there is one thing we know more about than another, it is a crick in the back and on the other hand, if there is one thing we know less about, it is how one is to get rid of it. We experience its lonesties, and know nothing of its origin, and nothing to prevent it when it is due. A man may chop wood, shovel snow, drive a pair of pulling horses, or perhaps dig dandy holes, go through a gymnasium and try all the appliances for developing muscle, and expect every minute that his back will break, and it will be all right, and yet some day he will be putting on his overcoat, or will reach across his desk for a photograph of his girl, or pick up a paper off the floor, and the crick catches him, and he is as lame as a rag, and suffers agonies for the time being, and he draws seemingly to go right through his vest crick. When a large healthy man has a crick in the back he realizes what a weak, puny thing he is. The mere arrival of the crick he admires himself in the glass before retiring, as he looks at his muscles, and almost he feels somebody would rather not tackle to him, when he could wade in and knock out titty of his antagonist. He often looks up in an impudent manner to a tough as though he asked for an excuse to thump him, and if a lady was insulted in his presence he feels that he would make a hero of himself in her defense. He wants something to occur that will give him an opportunity to show that though he is confined to an office, and does not land very much he is endowed with herculean strength, and it would be mighty unsafe for an ordinary man to tackle him. But when the crick is due by schedule time, and shows upon his back, the great, powerful man is a perfect baby, and he is afraid of a child on a handsled. It is then that he brings up an old revolver and carries it when he goes down town nights, for fear he will be assaulted. Before the crick arrives he just adores to have semi-laggers and foot-mats attack him, and as he walks along by dark places where he would knock sand-bags down, and his mind he has been recorded up all along the streets, but after the crick comes, a feeble kitten could knock him down and could drive him all over town.—Peck's Sun.

She Would Brave Her Ma.

On an Oakland beat there was a young man who, from a superficial observer would set down as spoony. The young man was free from his pocket a small jewelry case, and pressing a spring displayed a handsome diamond ring.

"This is for you, dear," he said.

"Oh, my," she replied, "how pretty! I love kind, but I really cannot accept it. What would ma say?"

"Oh, but you must accept it, I bought it for you."

"But, oh, George! really, you know, how can I? Ma doesn't allow me to take presents from gentlemen."

"All right, then; it's no use to me. I'll give it to Miranda——"

"What! Miranda Smith, the horrid, red-headed thing? Rather than she should have it I'll brave ma and accept."

The Law in Regard to Animals.

Ordinarily wild animals are not protected. Any man may hurt and kill them. In some places, however, regulations are made to protect certain kinds of animals from hunters, so that the species may not become extinct.

Once confined and under the control of man, they become private property, and are protected as such. To take a deer out of a park, or a cow from a pasture, is stealing. The old Norman kings of England punished these stealing with death, but this law has been long a dead letter.

Animals that have a money value, such as cattle, sheep, and pigs, have always been considered, in law, as much private property as horses and hands. Pet animals, like dogs and cats, were formerly held of little account. The law was also a new one and could be sent to prison for theft, but, if he stole a pet dog, he could not be prosecuted as a criminal. The owner, however, could sue him and recover damages for the loss. In later years laws were passed to cover this defect.

Owners of animals have always been liable for any mischief their pets may commit. Formerly they were not liable unless they knew their animals were dangerous. For example, the first time a dog killed sheep the owner was not obliged to pay, but the second time he was so served.

A man may keep a fierce dog to protect his house from burglars, but must see to it that the dog is chained. If then, he bites a person who carelessly or unmindfully enters the kennel, the owner is not responsible.

Modern laws hold a dog-owner responsible for the acts of his dog, if he thinks that the dog is not vicious, however, he can escape by killing the dog. If, however, the law says that whoever keeps one must take his chances.

Any person may kill a dog that attacks him while out of control or in the old gentleman's condolence, or sheep, anybody may kill it. However, the dog is protected while on the land of its owner.

Nowadays nearly all countries have laws providing dog-owners with license to keep their animals. Unless every dog has an owner who is responsible for it, much damage would be done for which no one could be called upon to pay. Under these laws, owners of unlicensed dogs may be fined. The dogs themselves are killed by public officers who are specially charged with the duty.

In the ancient German empire a curious use was made of these animals. The emperors Otho I. and Frederick Barbarossa condemned persons who were guilty of trying to stir up sedition, and distrust the power of the public, to notoriety and derision. The offenders had to carry a dog upon their shoulders, and march round town in triumph.

Uses of this kind are no longer in vogue, and dogs are left to live out their lives in peace if the public prefer to do so, but the law is obliged to take cognizance of them.

The Rash of an Eagle's a Fire.

You are sitting at tea when the alarm rings. You don't know the box, but you rush out on the street and look around you. In a moment the ominous smoke comes on the car. The horses come out of their stables; the firemen rumble as cats, deep to their stations, the engines are thrown open, their enticement dash out of No. 1 to see the fire, and "bang! bang! bang! whist! rush o'Lang! crack! look out! ding, ding, ding! away they go like a tornado.

Crack! bang! away! look out! Bang, sleeping children may be smothering, bang, ding, ding! An old man, feeble and rheumatic, may be staggering in smoke. Look out! the street may be covered with flames, is yelling for his babies! Look out, then! look out! bang! bang! bang! ding! ding! ding! the crime, like a storm. The drivers stooping down with blackened faces, stooping to the intent steeds that, big-eyed, wide-nostrilled and strained, go thundering on.

The foreman sitting by his side, erect and demure, with arms folded, firm-faced at the sky, searching for the ominous glare. The firemen behind him clinging like cats to a ladder, drawing themselves as the machine thunders on.

The ubiquitous reporter taking notes on the hoomplate of the lofty ladder. Bang, boom, bang! look out! The pass a crossing like an earthquake on wheels. The horses, alive and stung with the same enthusiasm which fills the firemen, spurn the rough street and dash along as if a frame on fire was chasing them. They round in whip, they round an hack; their big arteries are charging with hot blood; their big muscles are strung to the task they love. The wild horse, followed fast by red fire, never speed like they. With ears laid back, with eyes standing out from the bony face, with nostrils red as if with blood, they gallop on onward. It is a link of humanity following closely upon the existence of this conflagration, the Damon-and-Pythias duo appears against the western sky, moving boldly to the front from without the confused mass of flying clouds.

Old soldiers say if you see a cannon ball in the air, and it appears to be standing still you would better hide. If it appears to be moving, there is no danger for you. So with the cyclone. If it is moving from one side to another, you are safe; if it seems to be standing still and only growing larger, it is coming directly at you.—Atlanta Constitution.

A Large Pasture Field.

As an example of the extent of the fenced areas in the Territory, your correspondent being with a party of gentlemen in the Indian Territory on a hunting expedition: The party entered the eastern gates of a pasture field at 8 o'clock in the morning, and, travelling westward during the day, passed through one of the western gates at 4 o'clock in the evening, and yet this is only one of several large pasture fields in the Indian Territory. It is said that Maj. Drum alone has sixty miles of fence. The fences are built of cedar posts and three strands of barbed wire. The cattle business of the Indian Territory has grown to immense proportions, there being at present not less than 200,000 head of cattle on the range.—Wichita Jeffer.

Ice Made in the Tropics.

In the tropical climate, far distant from high mountains, as weather natural snow nor ice can be obtained, recourse is had to the cold generated by evaporation and the comparative coolness of the air a little before daybreak to manufacture ice in large quantities, and thus to supply a most grateful luxury at a moderate price. Ice is thus simply manufactured in a large way at Benares, Allahabad, and Calcutta, in the East Indies, where natural ice has never been seen.

On a large, open plain an excavation is made, about thirty feet square and two feet deep, on the bottom of which sugar cane or maize stems are evenly placed to the height of about eight inches. On this bed are set rows of small, shallow, unglazed earthen pans, so porous that when filled with water the outsides are immediately covered with a thick dew oozing through them. Toward the dusk of the evening, the pans are filled with water, and then are filled with soft water, generally boiled, and let remain there during the night.

In the morning, before sunrise, the ice makers and their collier from India take a crust of ice, more or less thick, and adhere to its inner rib, and it is put into baskets and carried without loss of time to the common receptacle, which is a deep pit in a high, dry situation, lined that with straw and then with old blankets, where it is beaten down and compacts into a solid mass. The crop of ice varies extremely, sometimes amounting to more than half the contents of the pan, at other times scarcely a pellicle. Clear and serene weather is the most favorable for its production, whatever may be the sensation of the atmosphere. The cold generated by the rapid evaporation round every pan of the pan is the cause of this congelation. In this way ices are secured for the table, when the heat in the shade is very commonly about 100 degrees.

The Shark, the Pollock and the Shad.

In the same inlet there lived a Shark, a Pollock and a Shad. The Shark was born tired and seldom exerted itself to do anything but rasp out an occasional remark to shad and cod. The Pollock was a lively young fop, who was forever running in his grandfather's beard and courting the best society. The Shad busily attended to his business of getting his body into trim to be made into a Sardine.

"What is the matter with fellow Shad is," Pollock remarked to Shad one day.

"Yes, I think there's something wrong about his character, I'm thinking. I'm not sure but we owe it to ourselves to wipe him out."

"Hight you are; and if you will roll onto your back, and get ready for line, I'll drive him this way, and you can gobble him up. Then will morality and good government be vindicated, and the neighborhood rid of a pest."

"Yes, I think I can do that," said the Pollock made a dash for the unoffending Shad; which, frightened 'most out of its wits, realized that he was and that, and finally into the seaweed he went, and the Pollock, like a true knight pursuit, and just as the grand object seemed in view, the Shark gave a flip of his tail, shot ahead six feet, and the Pollock was calmly sleeping by the side of the frightened Shad.

As the Shark rolled back into his normal position he winked at a Frog who had been witnessing the tragedy from a neighboring rock, and wiped his lips with a devil's apron, softly sighing: "Green but tender."

This fable teaches that the prudent physician does not take his own medicine; also, that when big fish want to take in partners it is always in order to ask a definition of the word "in."—Portland Transcript.

The Clipped Horse.

A man who owned a fine Horse had him clipped in mid winter, and the shivering animal turned around and asked him:

"Why do you deprive me of my coat in such cold weather?"

"Oh! it's to make a dairy of you," was the reply.

"As soon as the Horse was attached to the cutter he began kicking, and did not stop until he had smashed the outfit.

"What on earth possessed you to do that?" asked the owner.

"Because a dairy of a Horse would look like before a Jump Cutter," was the reply. "And I may as well smash that; if you are going to be fool enough to put a Hostler to hold the reins behind me."

Columbia River Cannery.

Mr. George Home, one of the largest canners of fish on Columbia River, Oregon, says that he suffered with rheumatism for seven years, having spent six months at Arkansas Hot Springs and at Paso Robles Springs, Cal., four months in every year, without benefit. Finally he tried St. Jacobs Oil, the great pain cure, and in a short time all stiffness and soreness of the joints disappeared.

East Jordan.

East Jordanites have not forgotten that campmeeting has already commenced at Petoskey, and are going to avail themselves of the opportunity to attend by going on the elegant pleasure steamer, Thomas Friant, which leaves East Jordan Sunday, Aug. 3d at 7 a. m., Dwight's Landing one half hour later, stopping at Ironton also.

The excursion under the auspices of, and for the benefit of the I. O. G. T. was a grand success all around. The evening was fine, the passengers lively but very orderly. The Queen of the Lakes arrived at Charlevoix early enough to give the party ample time to visit the rink, and other places of amusement, arriving home in good season. The affair netted the Good Templars $25.

Farmers are selling excellent new potatoes at 75 cts per bushel. They report haying about over and that wheat in this vicinity will be ready in some places within a week.

An attempt to organize and maintain a Blaine and Logan club, is meeting with partial success.

It has been a long time since we have had an entertainment in town.

East Jordan is full of visitors and others, who have come to stay which we think speaks well of our town.

Several vessels left the past week laden with bark and lumber, for Chicago, Milwaukee, and other cities, and although the trade is reported quiet, there seems to be enough enthusiasm among our country people to keep business moving, even if the margins are small, and all such grit and determination to keep business going is developing a better feeling as regards dull times.

The land boys are making arrangements for an excursion to Mackinaw and the straits in the near future.

Ironton.

Preaching at the school house last Sunday at 3 o'clock, by Rev. C. F. Van Auken.

This seems to be a favorite field for sewing machine agents; they are welcome though, since one of them succeeded in entreating a woman from the depths of South Arm last week, probably saving her life, and adding to this comfort of others.

Mr. Buttars, administrator of the estate of James Otis, deceased, removed his effects from Ironton early last week.

Burgoms.

The cases of diphtheria mentioned last week in district No. 4, have all yielded to the successful treatment of Dr. Lewis.

Our school officers made a demand on the town treasurer for money that belonged to our district. He informed them that he had used it for other purposes, by order of town board.

At a school meeting held in district No. 4, the officers were instructed to collect the money due that district from the township treasurer. Some people want all that belongs to them.

The Butler club meets every Saturday evening at Gilson's school house. Free discussion. All are invited.

A Sample of Protection.

Mr. Sherwood Dixon, of Dixon, Ill., at a democratic meeting at Amboy in the same state a few days ago, showed up one of the methods of robbery peculiar to the protective system as follows:

We have in our city of Dixon one of these protected "American industries." It is no "infant," for it has existed there for nearly or quite twenty years. With the exception of a brief period about the year 1872, it has been and is to-day a special object of protection. Continuously since 1861, with the exception of the period I have named, the laws enacted by the republican party have imposed a protective duty upon imported goods of the class manufactured by this establishment (hugging for cotton and other manufacturers). Here we have an industry which according to the theory of the protectionist is to furnish employment to the laborers, consume the waste product of the farm, field, the flax straw, and advance the interests of our community. Yet for nearly or quite a year past it has stood idle. The building is there, the machinery is in place, the water power to propel it exists, yet the hum of the wheels has ceased, and the operatives are forced to find employment elsewhere. And I am informed that, while not a yard of bagging has been produced or marketed, while the mill has remained silent and they who were accustomed to find employment there have been idle or driven to other occupations, the proprietors have received dividends on what the mill might have produced, and I am told that those dividends amount to $20,000 for the period during which no work has been done there.

The proprietors of the various bagging factories in the country have entered into a combination or pool for the purpose of controlling the quantity of bagging to be manufactured, and by thus limiting it to maintain its price at such a figure as will enable those mills which are run not only to earn a reasonable profit, but also to pay the mill at Dixon (and doubtless others) for remaining idle. Now I say, and I believe that every thoughtful man will concur with me, that any system of legislation which enables idle capital to earn dividends while the consequently enforced idle labor must starve or consume the savings of former industry, is wrong.

"Not Proven."

Charges of immorality may be made and proven against the mass of mankind. Strange as it may seem there is no use in shutting our eyes to the fact that the measure of immorality is largely a question of location. This is just as certainly true as that there are degrees of immorality. In certain communities dancing and card playing for amusement are considered immoral. Judged by the English standard the French are lax in their morals. The Michigan standard is higher than the California standard; the Boston standard higher than Chicago, and, if reports may be believed, the Detroit standard is a little above the Buffalo standard. The Evening Journal has distinctly announced editorially that it has nothing, and will have nothing, to do with the general charges of immorality made against Grover Cleveland. We simply asked that the charges of immorality and the cruel and brutal treatment of a woman be investigated. The Evening Journal, has personally conducted a thorough investigation of the matter at Buffalo, and every honest journalist in that city will concede as several have stated already, that the investigation has been unbiased and impartial. It may be somewhat early in the case to render a verdict, but with all the light which can be at present thrown upon the market there is but one conclusion in our mind. The old Scotch verdict of "Not Proven" will be rendered. And in so far as the charges of cruelty, brutality and inhumanity are concerned, unless Maria Halpin opens her mouth and speaks, the verdict of "Not Proven" must stand.—Evening Journal.

Those papers the loudest in advocating the protection of American labor from the "pauper labor of Europe" somehow forget to practice what they preach. The New York Tribune, the Philadelphia Press, and the Indianapolis Journal are all advocates of the protection theory, and cry for a tariff that will give American workmen high wages; yet, strange to say, they practice just the opposite. They denounce the efforts of their own workmen to raise wages, as interfering with the rights of American citizens to employ anyone they wish, and at as low wages as they can get them to work for, and then in effect say to their employes: "While we consider it wrong for you to try and get high wages while in our employ, it is perfectly proper to prevent you spending your money where you can buy the cheapest." They have howled for protection to American labor so long that perhaps some of them actually believe a tariff is a benefit to the laborer; just as the mill owners of Oswego will tell you, with the simplicity of children, that their men are better fed, better clothed and better housed than any other help in the United States, though your own eyes and ours and most tell you just the opposite. Just as to the manufacturers, who are all the time importing the cheapest help they can find, and are all the time reducing the average pay of those they employ, does anyone for an instant suppose they are advocates of a protective tariff for the sake of their workmen? They may be able to believe that the average laborer into believing that the tariff helps to sustain his wages, but they are not so simple minded as to deceive themselves. The lumber and salt and sugar and iron manufacturers want a tariff for no other reason than the simple one that it puts money into their pockets. Their goods are protected from competition with foreign countries but they can search the whole world over for the cheapest labor to be found.

Everybody knows that the tax on lumber has not been reduced—it remains at the same figure as for many years, $2 per thousand feet—but the wages of the men working in lumber camps and saw mills are undergoing reductions all over the state. How does this happen, if the republican doctrine, that a "high tariff means high wages," is true?

Wages are determined by supply and demand. There is no tariff "protection to American labor." The so-called pauper laborers of Europe are free to come here whenever and in such numbers as they please, and they are even contracted to come here by the beneficiaries of protective taxation because they will work cheaper than will American laborers. Yet republicans claim that "protection" protects labor!

In twenty ports in England and Ireland an aggregate of 7,748 seamen signed the total abstinence pledge last year. This is an effective plan for lessening the dangers of the sea.

Mr. W. S. Caine, M. P., presiding at the annual meeting of the united kingdom band of hope union, said there were now about 5,000,000 abstainers in the united kingdom, most of whom had become so through the influence of bands of hope. The union reports 11,059 bands of hope, a membership of 1,824,377 and 55,000 active honorary workers.

Oh! for one generation of clean and unpolluted men! Men whose veins are not fed with fire; men fit to be the companions of pure women; men who do not stumble upon the rock of apoplexy at mid-age, nor go staggering down into a drunkard's grave; but who can sit and look upon the faces of their grandchildren with eyes undimmed and hearts unconsumed. Such a generation as this is possible in America, and to produce such a revolution, the persistent, conscientious work of temperance reformers is entirely competent.

It is often said that prohibition of the liquor traffic will entail great loss upon the various business interests of a community, state or nation. The following practical results of the great temperance revival in Medina, N. Y., are by no means exceptional, and prove total abstinence a profitable investment: Men on every side are telling of old debts paid up and of sales to men who two months ago would not have dreamed of purchasing such articles. A butcher said, "I have ordered an extra lot of cattle and must order more." "I cannot keep up with the demand since this temperance work began." A dry goods merchant told of a woman coming in to pay a debt of $14 and saying she had just paid a grocery bill of $60, all because her husband had signed the pledge. A coal dealer told of a man paying a bill and saying he was ashamed that it had run so long, but he had signed the pledge but a little while before and "this was beer and whisky money."

A NEW YORK firm, Zimmerman & Forshay, shipped 60,000 trade dollars and 100,000 Mexican dollars to China last week.

THE WEST.

ACCORDING to Mr. Baynes, statistical agent of Dakota, the spring-wheat crop of that Territory will yield 26,000,000 bushels. The grain is of good quality. The Minnesota crop is estimated at 44,000,000 bushels. The winter-wheat yield in Nebraska will be from thirty to forty bushels per acre, and the spring-wheat yield from twenty to twenty-five bushels. Rye, oats, corn, and barley promise well in Nebraska and Minnesota. . . Reports of the condition of the crops in Iowa and Illinois continue favorable. This is especially so as to corn. Wheat will be up to the average. The smaller grains are fair to good. The potato crop has suffered in some localities on account of drouth. . . RETURNS from 155 letter-carrier post-offices for the quarter ending June 30 show a falling off in revenue as compared with the corresponding quarter of the previous year of $36,416. On this basis the receipts for the year will be $140,000 less than for the previous year. The diminution is due to the reduction of letter-postage from 3 to 2 cents. The post-office authorities look upon the showing as satisfactory.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR has left Washington for his summer vacation. Secretary Lincoln is the only member of the Cabinet who remains at the capital. . . Lieut. Schwatka, of arctic fame, has resigned his commission in the United States army. It is understood that he will accept a lucrative position under a foreign government.

A STATEMENT of the Treasurer of the United States shows that the net amount of gold now in the Treasury is about $119,000,000. This shows that there has been a falling off of about $43,000,000 since the 1st of the month, which is equal approximately to the total of the gold certificates issued during the current month. The Air Laden with Gases from Streams Rocking in the Foulest Filth.

A special cable dispatch from Marseilles to the New York Times contains a graphic narrative of scenes and incidents of the cholera district by an eye-witness. It says: Everything is now in readiness for the Chamberlain over one-half the slums were burned. The second day of the encampment witnessed a great parade. That was received with tremendous cheers by 60,000 people, who thronged every street on the line of march. The parade passed the City Hall, where children on a canopied platform were waving banners and singing an old war song, which the veterans took up, and passed on with uncovered heads. The third day's proceedings were somewhat tame, and were not so largely attended. A good many soldiers had private reunions at the camp and in the streets. There was also a procession, and in the evening a camp-fire at which Gen. Sherman delivered a speech. The fourth and last day was devoted principally to the election of officers for the encampment of 1884. J. S. Kohn, of Ohio, the only Union army in 1861 as a drummer boy, but again that he is 23 years of age, was elected Grand Commander; John P. Rea, of Massachusetts, Senior Vice-Commander; Frank H. Hicks, of New Haven, Conn., Junior Vice-Commander; Portland, Me., was selected as the place for the encampment next year.

SURGEON GENERAL HAMILTON was notified that a child who recently arrived at New Orleans from Tuxhan died on the steamer Annie F. Silver, at Fort Anderson, Miss., probably from cholera. A strict inspection was at once ordered. . . Gen. Hamilton.

ENGINEER W. R. CHAMBERS, of the steamship Loch Garry of the Greely relief expedition, furnishes some interesting details of the voyage from the bay of his vessel, from which it is expected that he will sail from St. Johns, N. F., northward they were in imminent peril. Hundreds of floes were during the expedition vessel and crew were threatened with destruction by icebergs and floes.

MEMBERS of the Amalgamated Miners' Association in Ohio and Pennsylvania are forming a combination against the company store, letter known, perhaps, as the truck system.

THE balance of trade against this country for the first twenty-nine weeks of 1884 amounts to $71,414,47. . . Reports from twenty-six of the leading clearing-houses of the United States, outside of New York, show that the aggregate clearings for the last week was 11.4 per cent. less than the average for the corresponding week of last year. The New York Clearing-House report shows a decrease of 24.7 per cent.

THE steamship J. M. Osborne, of Cleveland, which was sunk in Lake Superior by a dead-steamer Bradley, has been raised and the mate, the cook, a fireman, and five deck hands.

DR. SALMON, the Veterinary Surgeon of the Department of Agriculture, says he has no doubt that Texas fever is the cause of the recent mortality among cattle carrying in Chicago, and also among somebody in Nebraska, Kansas and Kansas. The disease exists only among Southern cattle. In the Southern Territories it exists, does not manifest itself, but as the cattle move north it develops, contrary to tender forms. Dr. Salmon says that there would be no danger from the disease if the cattle were removed north in winter. The disease can be communicated to all native cattle, but it cannot be communicated to them.

FOREIGN.

MICHAEL DAVITT was presented with an address in Tipperary, Ireland, on Sunday. He said it was the duty of every Irishman in Great Britain and Ireland to assist in the parliamentary contest in Ulster. Referring to American politics, he said that the American people were the friends of the Republic. To America they owed their freedom. He alluded to the Irish-American Union, Butler—Mexican offering to buy the London market, and Tupper, Bowlby to the amount of $36,000,000, bearing 3 per cent. interest.

PECULIAR details of the collision of the steamer Lathem with the Spanish ship Origon show that 190 persons died. The Lathem was struck amidships, and went down twenty minutes after. The wounded and crew said their was the best they could to the Origon, which became so much damaged that her boats were not able to hold one-half those on board, and those who were fortunate enough to get on first fought off with knives those who attempted to get on. The scenes were harrowing in the extreme. The mutiny on the Wellington, lasted several days, and messages by a London jury against the physician Sempley, who recommended that the latter be confined in a lunatic asylum as a person of unsound mind.

HENRY M. STANLEY, the African explorer, has reached Zanghat. When he left the Congo country, he was trying badly from bronchitis, but was much benefited by the sea voyage.

UP to the 30th of July there had been 1,145 deaths from cholera at Marseilles. Of the number 795 were Frenchmen, 350 Italians, and 13 Spanish. There was one American. A merchant who arrived recently in Cairo from Rosada, says that he saw a letter from Gen. Gordon, dated June 21. Gordon, in the letter, says he is well, and has taken despot provisions and ammunition, but is in which Mr. Hendricks was then involved on all sides by the Mahdi's forces, but thinks he can force his way out when the Nile rises, and is equipping steamers with that object in view. Three thousand dervishes have been commenced in France under the new law.

CONNWALLA, the English Secretary of the Irish Postoffice, has been returned for trial on four different charges of immoral and felonious practices. . . Mild forms of cholera have appeared at St. Petersburg and towns in Russia.

ADDITIONAL NEWS.

AN association formed in Hamburg has purchased 130,000 acres of land in the county of North Carolina, next to Georgia. The agent will compromise with 1,500 families, intends to colonize 2,000 or more Germans on the tract.

JOHN DAUTRA & CO., tin merchants, New York, have failed. John Kimpel, carriage manufacturer, St. Louis, has made an assignment, having his assets of $45,000 and stating the amount of liabilities. Will J. Russell, Milwaukee, disappeared, were closed by the Sheriff; and P. M. Hargraves, private banker, of Longmont, Tex., failed for the fourth time.

SECRETARY FRELINGHUYSEN has received a report on the cholera epidemic at Toulon and Marseilles from Mr. Mason, Consul at the latter city. Mr. Mason says the municipal authorities at Marseilles have taken every precaution to prevent any form of contagion from taking possession of the city. It is well and well paved, the water supply is excellent, and the sanitary arrangements almost perfect. But the situation of the city on the shore of a land-locked inlet into which the sewerage enters neutralizes the precautions. This is the case not only with Marseilles, but with all Mediterranean ports. Toulon suffers from the same natural sanitary disadvantages, and the municipal authorities are not as careful as at Marseilles. Consul Mason says there is no doubt that the cholera was imported this time from Bengal, Cairo, to Toulon in a French transport. The dredging of the harbor at the time said another way to spread the epidemic.

WHILE practicing on the Shelbyville (Ind.) track, Miss Nellie Burke, the rider, was thrown from her stallion. Hancock, her companion, lost his balance in striking against a fence, the horse, which was valued at $2,000, was impaled, and died on the spot. . . The Grand Central Depot at Cincinnati was formally opened last week. The building cost $800,000.

BREADERS for last year from forty-two farms in counties in Illinois of Texas fever show a profit of 8 per cent. on the capital invested, and it is asserted that in ordinary seasons farming in that region will pay 12 per cent. . . The Mexican natural gas well in Washington County, Pennsylvania, has been sold to the Westinghouse gas syndicate for $800,000. . . Three masked men entered the farm-house of Lloyd Boyle, near Petrolia, Pa., and forced him to hand over $13,000 in cash.

Cherished by All.

The love of flowers is an instinctive element in the nature of most of the human family. Little children love to pull a prize their tiny garden of growing greenery with as intense a love as the most cultured horticulturist feels for his rarest exotics or his tenderest of plants. Alike, high-born ladies and the dwellers in prison gloom love the bright blossoms that speak a language of beauty, purity, and hope—of beauty for behold the lilies of the field, at once an emblem of perfect beauty and purity inspected; and where can we find so sweet and vivifying an emblem of hope as in the flowers that bring love again?

Not So Poor After All.

As the legend goes, says the Buffalo Express, a traveler on the old Milford turnpike in Pike County, Pennsylvania, one day after traveling a long way without seeing a human face, stopped before a hut, in front of which a man was making an excavation, in hopes of finding enough earth to make a little garden. The traveler remarked on the superiority and poverty in that part of the world. "Now, see here, stranger," said the man who was digging to his "I am poor as dirt, poor as poor, I think I am, I don't own but a half acre of this land."

THE Salt Lake Tribune says the Mormons install their wives as hired girls, and by swaps and exchanges of drudgery.

The New York telegram to Chicago Daily News, July 31:

George William Curtis has a very strong leading editorial in Harper's Weekly indorsing Gov. Cleveland as a Presidential nominee. It says:

The argument that in an election it is not a question that is supported, and that the Democratic party is low it be treated that the Republican party is low, and that the political issue is to be considered merely as between the merits of the rival conventions Republicans, independents, and some Democrats will vote for Cleveland and some Democrats will vote for Blaine, and some will not vote at all. Democratic Nominations.

For President—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

For Vice President—
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, of Indiana.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic State Convention to nominate candidates for state offices, and for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of other business will be held in the City of Grand Rapids, in Powers' Opera House, on

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1884,

Commencing at 12 o'clock noon.

All voters of this state, irrespective of party associations and differences, who can and will aid in the work of reforming the abuses, extravagance and unnecessary adulteration of government, and all who favor a reduction of internal taxation, and a revision of our tariff laws, are cordially invited to participate in sending delegates to this convention.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for every 500 votes and for every fraction of two hundred and fifty votes cast for Secretary of State at the last election, and one for every fraction of one hundred and fifty votes. Every organized county is entitled to at least two delegates, and under the rule adopted a delegate must be a resident of the county he represents.

H. F. BENNISON, Chairman.
H. P. DENNISON, Secretary.
Charlevoix county is entitled to two delegates.

Committee Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the democratic county committee, at the office of J. Milo Eaton, in Charlevoix, on Saturday, Aug. 16, at two o'clock p. m. The attendance of every member is desired.

Greenback Convention.

A mass convention of the greenback party of Charlevoix county, will be held at Boyne City, Aug. 8, at one o'clock p. m., to elect delegates to the state, congressional, senatorial and representative convention, soon to be held, and to contract such business as may come before this meeting. Chairman of the state central committee, Hon. W. D. Fuller, will be present. By order of committee.

E. H. SHEPARD, Secretary.

Notes and News.

Kent county nominates a union ticket for county officers.

Nearly all the German newspapers in the northwest have come out for Cleveland and Hendricks.

The Chicago Herald says two million young men will emt their first vote for president this fall, and advises that it will be well to look after them. Many of them will vote as their father's did, while others will try to vote intelligently on the merits of the issue.

The Chicago Herald produces figures to show that every man, woman, and child in the United States pays $2 cents a year tariff tax on sugar, putting $44,000,000 into the United States treasury, in order to benefit a few planters to the amount of $8,000,000. Could not this tax be slightly reduced while there is such a surplus in the treasury?

The New York Tribune tries to bolster up Blaine's prospects by printing a speech made by Henry Ward Beecher eulogistic of the candidate; but in a foot note in small type gives the whole thing away by saying it was delivered in favor of Garfield, and as Blaine and Garfield were friends, Blaine's name was substituted. Such trickery will not win Beecher will not support Blaine.

Innocent or not, Mr. Blaine has not escaped the gossiping tongues of his personal manager, and stories which would make his supporters blush with shame have been circulated about him. Hitherto no enemy or critic of his has recognized them as legitimate weapons of warfare, and they will be sorely tried and irritated beyond endurance by their opponents before they retaliate in kind. But when they do, we make bold to say that the scandals of Mr. Cleveland will curse the day when they ever provoked his friends and defenders into so ignoble and detestable, but necessary, a conflict. —Detroit Free Press.

The president of the Workingmen's assembly in New York has published a clear, concise statement of Grover Cleveland's course in regard to bills before the last session of the New York legislature, the passage of which was asked by the trades assemblies. The governor approved five out of six of these bills. As a consequence Cleveland is becoming a prime favorite among New York workingmen.—G. H. Hemerdinger.

I CLIMB TO REST.

BY LEON LAMONE.

Still mind, I think, if I would rest;
The third one's upward in his nest;
The young bird on the tree-top high,
Calls to itself within the sky.

The spouse, that oops to hasten down,
Return in chaste, the bills to crown;
The plaud arises from his root,
To rock shift her flower and fruit.

I cannot in the valley stay;
The spirit calls me upward away!
The voice I hear that will me round
Are ladders into higher ground.

To work—to rest—for each a time;
I feel, but I cannot also climb.
Which suit was ever quite at ease
Shut in be earthly habitudes?

I am not glad till I have known
Life that can hinder from my own;
A better level must be won,
A mightier strength to hem upon.

And heaven draws near as I ascend;
The longer I strive, the more I extend.
All things are broke unto to the Best;
I climb to rest, my God, for rest!

Carlings' Hearth.

The Haunted Jewels.

By Sara D. Rose.

"No," said old Grandma De Varney, in a voice which reminded one of a spiteful cat: "no girl shall ever own my diamonds who will not own the name I gave her—Mehitable Angusta, as aristocratic, high-sounding name it is, too.

"But, grandma, who could expect any girl nowadays to own up to such a ridiculous, old-fashioned name as that? I won't, any way—not for a thousand diamonds!"

"Nobody wants you to; nobody wants you to. You never should have them any way, if you should call yourself by as many names as Queen Victoria; it's too late in the day, my girl."

"Who, then, shall you give them to, grandma? Marcia?"

"Do you take me for a fool, Mehitable Angusta De Varney? If I should give them to that simple sister of yours, don't I know that it would be you that would wear them?"

"Then, I suppose, they will belong to residuaries, cross-eyed Mehitable Sisley, who sheds hypocritical tears when she hears that you are sick. But what does she care whether you live or die? and I don't know as I should, if you would not even see my face."

"She cares as much as you, my dear. Your joy when I have a bad spell shows itself in your evil countenance."

"Ha, ha," laughed Gusta De Varney, "I'm not a hypocrite, my way. I must say, I hate hypocrisy."

"There's a great many things you hate in this world, Mehitable Augusta; there's one comfort, any way, I shall leave my diamonds to Mehitable Sisley—you shall never possess them."

"As if I would accept a gift then to. When you are dead I shall just take the diamonds, and Miss Mehitable will be none the wiser."

"Mehitable Augusta De Varney!" cried the old woman, in a frenzy, and raising herself among the white pillows as far as she was able, "if you dare to do such a thing, I'll ruin your whole future for you. I'll make you wish you had dealt honestly by that poor girl."

"But, grandma, you forged," said Gusta, in a low, provoking tone, "you will be dead then, and cannot help yourself."

The aged woman almost sprang from her bed in her anger, as she shrieked:

"I will help myself; I will haunt you, Mehitable Augusta De Varney, if you dare lay hands on my diamonds after I am dead."

Gusta tossed her head and laughed in a scornful, sneering way; but before she could again speak the door opened, and Marcia, her younger sister, entered, say-ing, in a shocked tone:

"What! quarreling again with grandma, Gusta, and she so very ill. How can you have the heart to do so?"

"I have no heart, you know, sis; making but a cause general," laughed Gusta.

"I don't know about that, Gusta; you have very strong affections, and may have to suffer for them as much as more than you are causing grandma to suffer now."

"Don't preach, I beg," cried the heartless girl. "Here, hand me my hat; I'll get out of this as quick as possible."

After the careless and ungrateful Gusta had gone, Marcia, who was a sweet-tempered, kind-hearted girl, sat down in the vacant seat and soothed her grandmother down to something like calmness; but Marcia knew that, spite of all her ministrations, the old lady cared nothing for her, rating her far lower in her affections than she did the impudent Gusta, whom she declared twenty times a day she hated; but she went on with her duty as willingly as if she had been the last beloved of her grandmother's heart.

Everybody said that the fiery old lady and her granddaughter Gusta were exactly alike; but, if one should mention the fact to either of them, she would fly into a passion instantly and deny it with the greatest vehemence.

Old Mrs. De Varney had been a very high-spirited as well as wealthy woman, and her really fine diamonds had been the pride of her heart, and she had kept them through every reverse of fortune for the little motherless granddaughter she loved so well, and who bore her name; but as her idol grew older it was shattered, for Augusta became willful and very unkind to the poor old lady, and refused utterly to hear the name of Mehitable, which she hated. This was a great blow to the proud old lady, and she determined that if Gusta would not bear her name she should not wear her diamonds.

Marcia the old lady hated. She had no spirit, Mrs. De Varney said. But she had another granddaughter, the child of her only daughter, whom she had repudiated, because she had disgraced herself by marrying a poor man. Mrs. De Varney was then wealthy, but she was now poor, but this made no difference. She would not forgive the orphan child of her only daughter enough to see her. But although Mrs. De Varney would not look upon her face, she now intended her diamonds for her, because she said she hated Gusta, and if Marcia owned them, Gusta would be sure to wear them.

Marcia had listened to many exciting talks upon the subject, but felt little doubt but that Gusta would eventually own them; but she often said it was only right if Mehitable Sisley should get them, for grandma had done so much for Gusta and had never even seen her daughter's child. But this idea was a terrific thorn in the side of the proud and unloyal Gusta.

Marcia sat by her grandmother's side long after she was sleeping peacefully, silently sewing upon some embroidery intended for her sister's wardrobe.

Suddenly there was a terrible shudder ran over the form lying so silently among the pillows, and Marcia sprang to her feet to see the old lady in the agonies of death.

She rang a bell quickly, and gave the order:

"Send for father instantly, and tell Gusta to come quickly."

But before any one could reach her bedside, the old lady, without regaining consciousness, had passed into the land of shadows.

It was but a week after their grandmother's death, when Marcia saw Gusta one day trying the effect of her grandmother's diamonds.

"Gusta," said Marcia, "when are you going to send our cousin her diamonds?"

"They are not hers," replied Gusta, looking with wide opened eyes at Marcia. "Grandma gave them to me the very last day she lived."

Marcia looked a little incredulous, and said:

"Why, Gusta, I thought you were unmerciful with grandma that day."

"Well, I was not. She had just told me she thought she was going to die, and that I was to have the diamonds.

"But she had said so many times they were to be Mehitable's that I would send them to her, if I were you."

"If you were me you would not. I am going to wear them or finish the captivation of that rich Capt. Wilyoung, who is so devoted to me."

"Gusta De Varney, you are not going to that ball, with our grandmother just dead."

"What's the diff?" said Gusta, lightly. "I am not going to like all my relances because she is dead."

"But I told Capt. Wilyoung not to call for us on that account."

"But I have met him since, and I told him it would not make the least difference."

"Gusta De Varney, you have no heart, and I know you are always perverse."

"I know it, and if it does not trouble me what business is it of other people?"

Marcia said no more, but that night, when her sister's admirer called for her, Marcia was obliged to entertain him for a moment, as her sister was not ready.

"So you will not attend?" he asked.

"No," she replied coldly, "not so soon after grandmother's death."

She did not notice the look of approval in his face, but she wondered how he could admire one so heartless as her sister; in a moment more the servant came into the room and said in a low tone: "Your sister would like your assistance, Miss Marcia."

Marcia arose, and, excusing herself, went to Gusta's side.

"Marcia, I can't fasten these tormented things, and whenever I touch them they feel like burning coals."

"I would not wear them with that muslin dress, they are entirely out of place."

"Nonsense, clasp them on for me quickly."

Marcia did as she was told and then brought a light Sheffield shawl for her sister, who departed in a few moments for Mrs. Closse's grand entertainment.

Gusta was expecting the looks of astonishment which were cast upon her as she entered the great parlors, for grandma's diamonds could not be equaled in the town, and had been worn but a few times in the last twenty years.

She felt very proud and complaisant, and was delighted at the whispers and glances in her direction, and her triumph was at its height when, with Capt. Wilyoung, she took her place to dance. There was a peculiar look upon his face when he said:

"I beg your pardon, Miss DeVarney, but what very uncommon ornaments yours are?"

"Very uncommon indeed," lisped Gusta in delight; "there are none in Somerville like them."

"I should think not," said he, gravely, looking with wide opened eyes at Marcia. "Grandma gave them to me the very last day she lived."

Marcia looked a little incredulous, and said:

"Why, Gusta, I thought you were unmerciful with grandma that day!"

"Well, I was not. She had just told me she thought she was going to die, and that I was to have the diamonds.

"But she had said so many times they were to be Mehitable's that I would send them to her, if I were you."

"If you were me you would not. I am going to wear them or finish the captivation of that rich Capt. Wilyoung, who is so devoted to me."

"What's the diff?" said Gusta, lightly. "I am not going to like all my relances because she is dead."

"But I told Capt. Wilyoung not to call for us on that account."

"But I have met him since, and I told him it would not make the least difference."

"Gusta De Varney, you have no heart, and I know you are always perverse."

"I know it, and if it does not trouble me what business is it of other people?"

Marcia said no more, but that night, when her sister's admirer called for her, Marcia was obliged to entertain him for a moment, as her sister was not ready.

"So you will not attend?" he asked.

"No," she replied coldly, "not so soon after grandmother's death."

She did not notice the look of approval in his face, but she wondered how he could admire one so heartless as her sister; in a moment more the servant came into the room and said in a low tone: "Your sister would like your assistance, Miss Marcia."

Marcia arose, and, excusing herself, went to Gusta's side.

"Marcia, I can't fasten these tormented things, and whenever I touch them they feel like burning coals."

"I would not wear them with that muslin dress, they are entirely out of place."

"Nonsense, clasp them on for me quickly."

Marcia did as she was told and then brought a light Shetland

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., August 7, 1884.

Around the County.

South Arm.

Wheat harvest has begun although the weather is quite unpropitious at present.

A nephew of Mr. Sweet's is resorting in this vicinity.

Miss Hardy, of Ironton, registered at the Eagle hotel recently.

Dr. Bennett is seen out riding in a "spick span" new buggy. We are glad the doctor has decided to stay with us.

Mr. Isaac Bartlett is now filing for both Glenn's and Meech's mill.

Mrs. J. L. Lanway is very sick with inflammation of the lungs.

Mr. H. Wetherup took a trip to Ironton on Saturday 26th.

Some relatives from Echo helped Master Earle Vance celebrate his fourth birthday on July 29th.

Michael Addis took unto himself a wife on Tuesday 29th. The violin and refreshments made the "infair" a lively occasion.

Rev. S. P. May went across the lake and spliced a couple on Wednesday The happy bride was Miss Hawkins, but now is known as Mrs. Peter Bower.

We were misinformed about school closing as stated in our last items. It did not close until Monday 28th. The scholars and visitors visited the forest near the parsonage and "picniced," with recitations, dialogues and songs (the latter especially well rendered), and passed around refreshments, etc. It proved to be an enjoyable occasion.

Miss Porter left for Leland on the Gazelle on Tuesday and carried with her the best wishes of all.

Ironton.

R. M. Cherry, of Pine Lake Iron Co., arrived Saturday on the Queen of the Lakes.

Doctor Carlstein announces one case of scarlet fever in town.—Mrs. Frazell's little boy.

Masons are repairing the coal kilns.

Foreman Kemp has removed to Mancelona. His place has been filled.

J. G. Peterson's new buggy makes the dust rise on our streets.

A 11-year old son of Wm. Henry was drowned in Pine Lake last Sunday. Funeral from the family residence in Eveline on Monday. The boy was riding a plank or raft, and saw it drifting from shore and jumped off. The waves carried the body ashore.

Furnace shut down Sunday night for one week, to catch up with other repairs.

The meeting house in Ironton is being painted this week by Thomas Tindal and his brother.

Quite a number of men idle this week, no work at the furnace.

A number of our citizens took in the excursion to Petoskey last Sunday.

Springvale.

The berry crop is enormous this year.

The farmers have completed their haying, and it has turned out a better crop than expected.

Mr. Andrews is erecting a dwelling on his farm, near Mr. Wm. Adams.

Mr. W. C. Niles, and Mr. Johnson, of Clinton, contemplate putting up a shingle mill in the south part of this township.

Several teachers of this vicinity attended the teachers institute at Boyne last week.

A Sunday school picnic in the grove at J. K. Fox's next Saturday. Declamations by the juvenile scholars; able speakers are to be present; then to close with a good dinner. A nice time is anticipated.

At present the crops in this locality cannot be excelled; wheat, oats, corn and other vegetables are doing well, and every farmer anticipates a bountiful harvest.

Burgess.

C. S. Hampton, of the Harbor Springs Independent, will discuss the political issues of the hour, at Ramsby school house, Tuesday evening.

Jas. Bartlett addressed the Butler club at its last meeting, and several names were added to the list.

A move is being made to organize an assembly of knights of labor in this place.

Peter Kane is sick with diphtheria, and three of Frank Kane's family are sick with the same disease.

A number of persons looking up locations for settlement in Hayes last week.

Fish business not a success this season.

Catching weather for harvest.

Chas. D. Longe, of Flint, who has been visiting relatives in this vicinity, returned home last Friday.

Frank Durgin is digging wells for several of our citizens.

Why Longer Groan

With pain and bear the delusion that nothing can give you relief. There is a remedy that is greatly prized for the relief of the afflicted. It relieves pains and aches in all forms, stimulates the digestive apparatus to move perfectly its duty work, so you will not be suffering with dyspepsia and the long list of ills, the results of disordered digestion, dysentery, cholera and cramps It is Hamilton's Jamaica Ginger Tonic and Pain Cure. A SIGN-BOARD.

I will paint you a sign, remember,
And hang it above your door,
A truer and better sign-board
Than ever you had before.

I will paint with the skill of a master;
And many shall pause to see
This wonderful, swinging sign-board,
So like the reality.

I will paint yourself, remember,
As you wait for that fair young boy,
Just in the dawn of manhood,
A mother's pride and joy.

He has on the night of sleeping,
Left the home of his childhood,
And you wear so little and friendly,
He pauses to chat a while.

I will paint you again, remember;
I will paint you as you stand,
With a foaming glass of liquor
Held high in either hand.

He wavers; but you urge him:
"Drink, pledge me just this one;"
And he lifts the glass and drains it;
And the hellish work is done.

And next I will paint a drunkard:
Only a year has flown;
But into this loathsome creature
The fair young boy has grown.

The work was quick and rapid:
I will paint him as he lies
In a torpid, drunken slumber,
Under the winter skies.

I will paint the form of the mother
As she kneels at her darling's side,—
Her beautiful boy, that was dearer
Than all of the world beside.

I will paint the shape of a coffin
Filled with one mere "last,"
And the form of the drunken sleeper,
And paint it from cost.

The grief, the shame, and the sorrow,
The crime, the sin, and the woe
That is born there in your rum-shop,
No hand can paint you know.

But I'll paint you a sign, remember;
And many shall pause to view
This wonderful, swinging sign-board,
So terribly, fearfully true.

The W. C. T. U. will meet with Mrs. Blanchard to-morrow afternoon.

There will be a gospel temperance meeting at the M. E. church next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock. Mrs. T. B. Corse, of Chicago, will lead the meeting.

The opera house was crowded last Sunday evening, and Mr. Edward Murphy gave an excellent lecture,—historical, statistical, and advisory. At its conclusion 90 persons signed the pledge and donned blue ribbons.

The case with which temperance law may be enforced when its enforcement is in the hands of earnest men is shown by the fact that six young men of Prince Edward's Island have banished every saloon from one county of 40,000 inhabitants. In a town in this county not a single arrest for drunkenness has been made in six months, and the docket of the circuit court did not contain a single criminal case.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

At the last session of the legislature section 15 of chapter 3 of the school law was amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 15.—The district board shall specify the studies to be pursued in the schools of the district: Provided always, That provision shall be made for instructing all pupils in every school in physiology, and hygiene, with special reference to the effect of alcoholic drinks, stimulants, and narcotics generally, upon the human system: Provided further, that the text books used in giving the foregoing instruction shall have received the joint approval of the state board of education, and state board of health. The said boards shall prescribe the text books to be used, which shall be uniform on each subject that may be taught; but text books once adopted, under the provisions of this act, shall not be changed within five years, except by the consent of a majority of the qualified voters of the district present at an annual meeting. Each school board, making a selection of text books under this act, shall make a record thereof in their proceedings."

One of the new text books recommended by the state board of education and the state board of health is "Hygienic Physiology," by J. Dorman Steele, Ph. D. It is also endorsed by the national W. C. T. U. through whose influence similar laws have been placed upon the statute books of the states of Vermont, New Hampshire and New York.—Ex.

There is scarcely a day goes by unless we meet some wanderer returned from Kansas, Dakota, or Colorado who is willing to bear testimony that experience has taught him the lesson that Michigan is not only a good state to be born in but also to live and die in. A late number of the Chicago Christian Worker contains a letter from A. W. Flowers of Grand Rapids, who has spent the past 28 years in travel through Colorado, Dakota, Minnesota, Texas, Florida, Missouri, and Michigan, in which he says: "We think Michigan holds out the very best inducements for all sorts of business; for cheap, healthy homes, and for comfort and pleasure with less drawbacks than any other state in the Union." The Christian Worker is the organ of the Friends in the west, and Mr. Flowers closes his letter as follows: "We want to see Michigan settled by friends. The northern part of the state holds out grand inducements for those who want to settle as new beginners, or those who have abundance of means to do business. A very important thing to consider is that Michigan is nearly exempt from high winds, hurricanes, cyclones, and severe storms. We have the purest and best of water. Any who desire special information in regard to any place in Michigan, by addressing me at Grand Rapids and sending stamp for return postage will receive prompt answer and a book with maps, etc., free, containing 88 pages of important information, also further knowledge in regard to northern Michigan."

With protectionists their best stick in trade is the word itself. To be "protected" signifies security. Protectionists ring the changes on the word, and the ignorant and credulous flock to their standard. But the "protection" they give is the protection of the pick pocket, of the bandit, of the pirate, of the brigand. With one hand they offer the mechanic a penny, while the other is deftly at work extracting a dime from the protected man's pocket. They say, "See the industries we have built up, the manufactures we have encouraged, the wheels of commerce we have set going, and listen to the hum of industry with which we have made the air resound." But they refuse to either see or speak of the feverish and stimulated spasms to which they have subjected trade, unsettling the prices of both the labor engaged in manufacture and the market value of the commodities; they refuse to talk about the misdirection of capital and labor into unproductive fields save at a loss to the community at large; and above all, they are silent concerning the fact patent to any reader of political economy, that whatever of gain there is in protection goes into the coffers of the manufacturer, and will never reach the pocket of the laborer. "Protection" is a jug, the handle of which is in the grasp of a few, and for every drop of the contents doled out to wage-workers—if a drop is ever doled out—the protected manufacturers infer for themselves enormous and continuous draughts.—Evening News.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE Thetis, Alert, and Bear arrived at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, on the 1st inst., wh. re Lieut. Greely was joined by his wife and children, from California, and his mother and brother, from Massachusetts. Secretary Chandler and Gen. Hazen extended their hearty congratulations. The Wannamaker Company's furniture factory, Howard's Hotel, a planing-mill, lumber yard, and four schools at Philadelphia were destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $100,000. The Delaware and Hudson and Flatbush Dock Company's freight houses at Flatbush, N. Y., with their contents, two warehouses, and a number of loaded freight cars were swept away by fire. By the burning of a building at New York a child perished in the flames, and four persons were fatally burned. The financial loss is $75,000. Jay-Eye-See totted a mile at Providence in 2:10, beating the record of Maud S.

THE big hotels in the fashionable resorts of the Hudson are extensively patronized this year as during last and previous seasons. People do not appear to have as much money to spend, and are willing to put up with boarding-house accommodations in order to economize. Nearly half the buildings in Afton, N. Y., were swept away by fire, the loss being $75,000.

THE Pennsylvania Railroad depot, ferry-houses, slaughter-pens, and drops at Jersey City, together with the piers, upon which were a number of loaded freight cars, were swept away by fire. A gas explosion caused the fire, the loss being which amounts to about $600,000; Lieut. Greely and his surviving companions were given a brilliant reception at Portsmouth, N. H. Nearly half the people of the State turned out to welcome them. As soon as they had disembarked a procession was formed, and they were escorted through the city amid the cheers of the assembled multitude. They were formally welcomed by Secretary Chandler, the Governor of New Hampshire, and the Mayor of Portsmouth.

THE steamtugs firm of Gifford, Sherman & Innes, of New York and Poughkeepsie, N. Y., has been forced to the wall for lack of capital commensurate with its extensive business. The corner-stone of the Burdell statue, on Belmont Island, in New York harbor, was had last week.

DURING an old fend, Theodore T. Avery fatally shot Elmer E. Mowry at Woonsocket, R. I., and then sent a bullet into his own brain.

THE WEST.

TONS of dead fish, chiefly perch, are floating from Fourth Lake, near Shiloh, Wis., and buried in the sandbanks outside the city. The cause of the mortality cannot be learned.

"SHADOWS of a Great City" is in the fourth week of a successful run at McVicker's Theater, Chicago. It will be followed next week by "The Pavements of Paris." The church of Adolph Beist, said to be a play of unusual strength and interest.

EDGAR L. WAKEMAN, of Chicago, has organized a company with a paid-up capital of $100,000 to continue the publication of his sterling literary work, the Carrier. At a reception tendered by the St. Paul Chamber of Commerce to Robert Harris, he stated that the Northern Pacific intended within three years to complete its extension to Portland, and build a line at Cleveland without a ship in 2 D.O.; She was not accompanied by a running horse. The present wheat crop of Colorado—2,100,000 bushels—is a very great greater than any previous yield.

ORRIN A. CARPENTER, who was charged with the murder of his servant girl, Zora Burns, at Lincoln, Ill., and acquitted of the charge some months ago, contemplates bringing suits for damages against the members of the committee of citizens at Lincoln who waited on him with a set of resolutions warning him to leave that city. Mr. Carpenter was in Chicago the other day consulting lawyers, so says the Chicago Tribune.

JUDGE HAYES, of Clinton, Iowa, released a liquor-seller who had been fined and committed by a Justice of the Peace. The effect of this decision is to take all liquor cases to the district courts for trial on indictments by juries. . Fred Sharon, son of ex-Senator Sharon, was married at San Francisco to Mrs. Louise Breckenridge, the divorced wife of the Hon. O. C. Breckenridge, and daughter of Mr. Lloyd Tevis, President of the Wells-Fargo Express Company.

THE Texas fever is spreading among the cattle in southern Kansas. Gov. Glick intends to issue a proclamation prohibiting the importation of all Texas cattle into the State. He will permit them to pass through that State only by rail under strict quarantine. . The Governor of Montana has issued a proclamation quarantining Texas cattle from northern ranges. . In a report to Gov. Hamilton on the Texas fever, Dr. Pearson, Veterinary Surgeon of Illinois, recommends that most of the Southern States, with Missouri, Kansas, and Indian Territory, be proclaimed as infected and rail and steamship companies be prohibited from bringing cattle from those places into Illinois until Nov. 1, unless they certify that the shipments are healthy and have been outside the infected district for ninety days . A fire at San Francisco destroyed the establishment of Schmidt & Co., the principal lithographing firm of the Pacific coast. The ship of Tilton & Hobson was also destroyed. The total loss is about $270,000.

GEORGE Parsons, who claimed to be an old pioneer, was hanged for murder at Boise City, Idaho. Upon the gallows he called on the pioneers in the district to avenge his death.

At a meeting of the Central Dakota Press Association, at Huron, resolutions were adopted for a division of the Territory and the admission of South Dakota as a State under the Sioux Falls constitution. Col. Conklin, of the Watertown News, was elected President . The Peoria Base Ball Club has disbanded.

A TOPEKA dispatch reports that "Gen. Hatch has encamped with six cavalry companies at a point twenty-five miles south-east of Caldwell, Kan., and proposes to clear Oklahoma of two thousand invaders."

THE SOUTH.

MRS. FRANCES SUGGATT, a widow, aged 70, who died a few days ago near Salem, N. C., confessed that she had murdered her husband by pouring molten lead into his ear thirty years ago. She refused to say what was the motive of the crime.

A DISPATCH from Lexington, Ky., says: Reports from along the line of the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad give evidence of a better fight over the election of Appellate Judge from the Fifth District of Kentucky. In an altercation at Ezle-prize, Robert Griffy also and killed two men and then died from the effects of a shot from the pistol of one of his victims, who died before he was killed himself, or from the pistol of some unknown person. At Morehead a flight took place near the polls between William Tones and H. G. Price, and after exchanging shots the fight became general. The first man to drop was Solomon Bradley, killed by a bullet from the gun, and the second death was that of Add Sizemore, of Gatson Station, and the wounding of Allen Sizemore and John Martin and John Day followed. The Sizemore's said to have killed Sizemore, but was shot down by some one else in the crowd. Many others were injured. At Somerset, Ky., 60 years old, and Bud Dalton, aged 50, met at the election and renewed an old quarrel. The result was that Dalton was shot and killed. At an election held in the city of Covington, a Republican, that George Stewart, a Republican, killed John Schmidt, and that Dick Murphy disemboweled Jack Cleary with a knife.

ACCORDING to the reports of the Lynchburg (Va.) Tobacco Association the sales of leaf tobacco thus far this season have aggregated 19,000,000 pounds, 2,500,000 pounds less than the sales for the corresponding period of last year. The sales are now increasing and the manufacturers are buying freely.

A FORT WORTH (Texas) dispatch says: "It is a well-known fact at El Paso and points west of there that the yellow fever is raging at Nogales, Arizona. Nogales has about three miles south-east of El Paso, and 252 miles from El Paso. While the Texas authorities are maintaining a rigid quarantine along the Gulf line and the border near the mouth of the Rio Grande, they are practically leaving the western boundary line unprotected by any restriction whatever.

A SOUTHERN dispatch states that "5,000 veterans of the Union and Confederate armies are encamped at Dallas, Texas. A special train was tendered to Jefferson Davis, who contented himself with laughing better, his wife accompanying it with a statement that the physical condition of the ex-President prevented his from accepting his former comrades. Mr. Davis complains that the veterans of the war with Mexico have been the subjects of special attention.

EMMA J. HARRINGTON secured a divorce at Baltimore from Robert Ferring, whom she married in Castine, Me., in 1878. Ferring claimed to be a recluse, but a letter from Southern friends contained a picture of a small colored, who he unmistakably said was his nephew. Mrs. Ferring began an investigation, discovered that her husband's relatives were full-blooded negroes, and on the laws of Maine and Maryland prohibit marriages between Africans and Caucasians, was granted a decree.

POLITICAL.

SENATOR MAHONE has secured the discharge from the Insane Hospital at Washington of Col. W. E. Sims, with whom he had a bitter quarrel in the Republican National Convention, because he would not vote for Blaine.

IT is probable that the Democrats and Anti-Prohibition Republicans of Kansas will unite in the nomination of a fusion ticket for State officers and Supreme Court Judges. The Democratic convention will be held at Topeka on 29th inst., and the Anti-Prohibition Republicans will meet at the same place the same day.

MONROE (Ala.) telegram: "The State and county elections of Alabama passed quietly, so far as yet reported. Gov. Seay being last cast State ticket, that headed by Gov. E. A. O'Neil, the result can be anticipated. In several counties there were independent candidates for county offices, who have been defeated, except in Mobile, where the independents obtained, by the help of the colored vote, a large majority over the regular Democracy."

PORTSMOUTH (N. H.) dispatch: Calvin Page, Democrat, was chosen Mayor over W. H. Sise, Republican, by a majority of 1,003 to 434. He sent and Republican vote over cast in the city. The Democrats for the first time in many years elect a majority of the City government, securing thirteen out of the sixteen Common, and six out of nine Aldermen . It is understood that Mr. Sise will contest, and a grand banquet by prominent citizens of Boston next month.

THE Illinois Greenbackers have issued a call for a State Convention at Bloomington on the 27th of August. A Boston dispatch says the Massachusetts Greenbackers of that State will hold a convention for the nomination of State officers Sept. 5. The State Democrats feel confident that Butler will accept the Presidential nomination tendered him by their party.

DRS. BUTLER has written the following letter:

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 1.

To the Hon. Chas. A. Dana, editor New York Sun, New York:

DEAR SIR: As a means of reaching some good result, I hereby give my adhesion to the title the name for such use as you may deem best, and I shall be ready to stand in the front of the battle with the Greenback-Labor men and the anti-Monopoly men, and I shall cast my vote for me who thinks that it is the best election and renewed in old age, and in the course of which Dalton was shot and killed. At an election held in the city of Covington, a Republican, that George Stewart, a Republican, killed John Schmidt, and that Dick Murphy disemboweled Jack Cleary with a knife.

He afterward addressed the veterans.

TWO SQUADRONS of United States cavalry descended upon Oklahoma Payne's camp at Rock Falls, Indian Territory, arrested the leaders, and alarted them off for Fort Smith. The women, children, and other members were escorted to the Kansas line. Of Payne's paper, which was ready to go to press, 500 copies were printed, when the machine was packed up and loaded into a wagon. The boarding-house, drag-store, and some other cheap structures were burned, and a vestige of the settlement was permitted to remain. Payne, who had been bloodily-set in his dotents, was decile as a lamb under arrest.

Too Young to Die.

Once upon a time Charon was surprised to find a venerable female walking up and down the further bank of the River Styx dramatically demanding ferriage to the portals of hades.

"And who are you?" roughly inquired the grim boatman.

"I am Youth," replied the venerable female, "I am a European prima donna."

"How old are you?" asked Charon. "Eighty-seven last May," replied the sorry crone.

"Then get thee hence," cried Charon; this is no place for thee! What! and would let thou court death at thy tender age, when so many aged strangers await thee in America!"—Chicago News.

THE FOREIGN VOTE.

Some Interesting Statistics Compiled from the Last Census.

Never before, perhaps, says the St. Louis Republican, has so much interest been taken in the numbers and influence of foreign-born citizens of the United States as at this time. Certainly there never have at any other time been so many speculations so divergent respecting the inclination of different nationalities. There were in the United States in 1880, according to the national census, 6,679,943 foreign-born persons. These were from thirty-seven nationalities, counting those from Germany, Great Britain, and British America as including from only three nationalities. The mass of the foreign-born population, however, comes from the following countries and is located in the several States as shown below:

States.	Germany.	Great Britain.	Ireland.
Alabama	271	1,236	1,506
Arkansas	767	2,959	4,456
California	54,637	45,267	62,305
Colorado	5,766	7,012	10,262
Connecticut	37,040	42,715	76,021
Dakota	10,354	7,776	9,326
Florida	446	876	859

These nationalities comprised 5,174,504 of the whole foreign population of the country in 1880. The nationalities which made up the mass portion of the remainder of the foreign-born population were: Russians, 85,563; French, 106,954; Danes, 66,126; Scotch, 170,136; Welsh, 79,332; Holanders, 58,696; Italians, 44,230; Bohemians, 68,399; Norwegians, 181,722; Poles, 48,877; Russes, 35,732; Swedes, 194,267; and Swiss, 88,621. These are well distributed through the Northern States but few hang in the former slave States. It will be observed that the Germans are the most numerous of the people of foreign-born population. If the nationalities of Southern Europe, speaking German or kindred languages, are counted together they numbers half the entire foreign-born population, and exceed by 50 per cent. the Irish, who are the next most numerous native stock. The popular vote at the Presidential election of 1880 was 9,210,976, or something above 18 per cent. of the population—from one vote in every 5.43 of the population. It is certain however, that by reason of not having qualified, or being not citizens, the foreign-born population does not send votes to the polls in proportion to its numbers. This is shown by the fact that in some cities, and wherever the foreign population is greatest, a large number of voters polled in fact short of the number of males of voting age. For example, in New York, 38 per cent. does not reach half the number of males above the age of 21 years, as shown by the census. Instead of casting one vote in every 5.43 persons it can be shown that that not more than one in eight of the foreign-born population goes to the polls. It is also proved that in all the States strongly contested by the Republican and Democratic parties the foreign-born population, the Germans generally preponderating, have been the most active, and the leadership towards crossed the German-born, while in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Wisconsin the Germans are most numerous. If very great changes are brought in the political complexion of the foreign-born vote the figures show the result of the approaching election may be radically affected by them.

SOUTHERN COTTON CROP.

Indications of an Unusually Good Yield. Less Cotton Acreage.

The National Cotton Exchange reports July as having been favorable for the entire crop, which is improved about 10 points, bringing it up to 87, against, 85 for June, and 84 for May. On the Atlantic seaboard the rainfall is somewhat excessive (particularly in South Carolina), and the betterment therefore is mainly in Georgia. Low temperature continued rains in the first half of July proved a disadvantage to the crop in North Carolina. In Alabama the plant suffered from rain and deficient cultivation. West Mississippi improved materially. West of the Miss ssippi the condition continues to vary widely, the drier sections, but Texas, owing to the protracted drought, has not in its any progress, and the reports in that State is now very critical, for, while the plant has stood the drought well for ordinarily well, it is now losing ground and suffering for moisture.

TEXAS FEVER.

The Plague Breaks Out Again in Kansas. Hopeless (Kansas) telegram:

The Sheriff of Ellis County, accompanied by Gov. Glick to-day that Texas cattle fever had broken out there, and that there was danger of its spreading generally through the southern part of the county, unless measures were at once taken to suppress it. The Governor ordered the stricken cattle to be quarantined immediately, and has sent the State Veterinarian to the infected district to take further action in the case. It is not known how the Ellis County cattle became infected, as none of the cattle from Texas have been shipped beyond Manhattan.

Democratic Nominations.

For President—
GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York.

For Vice President—
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, of Indiana.

Democratic State Convention.

The Democratic State Convention to nominate candidates for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, President and Vice-President of the United States, and for the transaction of other business will be held in the City of Grand Rapids, in Powers' Opera House, on

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 20, 1884,

Commencing at 12 o'clock noon.

All voters of this state, irrespective of party associations and differences, who can unite with us in an effort for a return of honest and pure and economical administration of government, and who are in favor of a tariff for revenue only, and a reform of our tariff laws, are cordially invited to participate in sending delegates to this convention.

Each county is entitled to one delegate for each 500 votes cast for Governor at the last general election, and one for every fraction of not less than 250 votes. Representative districts are entitled to at least two delegates, and under law to the adopted a delegate must be a resident of the county he represents.

JEROME EDDY, Chairman.
H. P. PENNIMAN, Secretary.
Charlevoix county is entitled to two delegates.

Committee Meeting.

There will be a meeting of the democratic county committee, at the office of J. Milo Eaton, in Charlevoix, on Saturday, Aug. 16, at two o'clock p. m. The attendance of every member is desired.

REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS

R. A. Alger, of Detroit, and Archibald Buttars, of Charlevoix, were nominated for governor and lieutenant governor, by the republican state convention, at Detroit, this morning.

The state convention has at last recognized northern Michigan, by the nomination of Mr. Buttars, and Charlevoix and adjoining counties will no doubt put their best work into the canvas to elect him, to insure future recognition. We congratulate Mr. Buttars for his success in a convention with so many prominent and active gentlemen as candidates for the same position.

Notes and News.

The greenbackers and democrats at Lansing are solid for fusion. There is scarcely a kicker there.

The lumber trade at Bay City is improving, and the planing mills are running to their full capacity.

All the elements hostile to the welfare of the country are arraying themselves against Cleveland.—Perry Belmont.

The republican organs have temporarily turned their sand batteries upon the prohibitionists. They hate a temperenzler almost as intensely as they do a democrat.—Marshall Expounder.

'Tis said that Tammany will collectively pronounce for Cleveland and individually for Butler. Neither of those candidates need count with confidence on the support of such a gang of tricksters.—Detroit Times.

"The issue is now clearly defined again between corruption and honesty, between extravagance and economy, between the army of dishonkers and the army of the people, and the result is not doubtful.—Gov. Walker.

"A third party cannot be built up in Michigan by a division of the electoral ticket this fall."—Republican organ. Every intimation of such a proceeding shocks the average republican soul, for it means death to republican rule in this state.

The remains of sergeant Edward Israel, one of the victims of the Greely Arctic expedition, arrived at Kalamazoo last Monday, and was buried with appropriate public ceremonies. All business houses were closed, and the people turned out en masse.

The independent republican press are moving heaven and earth to further Butler's chances as a third candidate alone. They are opposing fusion with all their vigor, and trying to convince Butlerites that they can possibly carry Michigan alone over Blaine and Cleveland, while a combination would disgust both Butler republicans and straightout democrats, and give the state to Blaine. Before the July convention they were afraid of Butler, and now their only hope lies in defeating fusion. Every Butler man who believes this nonsense and opposes fusion, works against his own interest, and to the advantage of republicanism is necessary to defeat Blaine in this state, and any other course will bring sure defeat to the opposition.

Concerning Fusion.

Newaygo Tribune: The question is one which must be met by both parties. They have twice joined forces in Michigan and in our judgment the results have, on the whole fairly justified the means.

An effort is being made all along the line to bring a union of all the opposition to the republican party in Michigan. The opposition can accomplish something in this way, as they did two years ago, while it would be simply folly to attempt a triangular fight.—Muskegon News.

The democrats and greenbackers in Kent county pooled their issues in nominating a county, setting an example for the state conventions which meet on the 19th and 20th of this month. "In unity there is strength."—Muskegon Workingman's Journal.

That Five Cent Veto.

Ah! Duffy of New York, exposed the animus of the fight on Cleveland for his veto of the five cent fare bill. We had thought it strange that the workingmen who now ride for five cents, should be fretting themselves to death because the "blades" and "plurisees" have to pay ten cents. It turns out that the real sufferers by the veto are not the workingmen, but a lot of real estate men who expected to make a fortune out of Harlem property, and the rich contractors, and others who intended to build out there. They expected and hoped to create an exodus of city residents, not workingmen, to their suburban region. Why the workingmen of the whole country should take up their lost cause is a mystery.—The Million.

Hendricks.

Mr. Hendricks' name in Indiana is a tower of strength, and the same is equally true of his great influence throughout the country. In 1876 Mr. Hendricks was elected vice president on a ticket with Samuel J. Tilden, of New York, but did not take his seat as presiding officer of the senate of the United States. He is again a candidate for the same office with another of New York's favorite sons. Again he will be elected, and this time he will be inaugurated. Cleveland and Hendricks is now the battlecry, and under this banner the democratic party will take possession of the government.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Anecdote from the Cow-Boy Country

Two ladies, one from the East and the other from the West, were sitting last summer on the veranda of one of our fashionable frontier hotels in Miles City chatting together, when two cattle men, clad in leather pants, buckskin shirts and sombreros, rode up.

"Oh, my," exclaimed the Eastern lady, "there are some of those horrid cow-boys; let us go inside."

"Why, you wretch," cried the little Western woman, "that's my husband," pointing to the foremost horseman.

"And the other?" inquired the Eastern lady.

"My brother," said the Western lady.—Chicago Tribune Letter.

The late Bishop Jacobson, of Chester, Eng., was once present when two dignitaries of his church were discussing a sermon preached by a Dean, who—to introduce political slang into ecclesiastical affairs—was somewhat "on the fence." Said one: "It struck me as being rather low." "That's curious," said the other "for I thought it was pretty high. What did you think of it, Mr Lord?" appealing to the Bishop. "Why," replied his Lordship, "to tell the truth, I thought it slightly Tory."

Now is the time your horses and cattle need attention. To prevent disease and keep up the spirits you will find Parsons' Condition Powders unexcelled. Full pounds 25 cents. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co.

WHY HE VETOED IT.

Reasons Given by Governor Cleveland for Disapproving the Five Cent Fare Bill.

Existing Contracts and Constitutional Requirements Ignored by the General Assembly.

The Measure Intended to Benefit Only People of Some Means and Considerable Leisure.

Workingmen Riding on "L" Roads at Five Cent Fares—The Clamor Raised by Designing Politicians.

(New York special.)

Since Governor Cleveland was first spoken of so prominently as a candidate for the Presidency, certain of his official acts have been brought up by his enemies to create a prejudice against him. Now that he is actually the nominee of his party it will be the more necessary for his opponents to misrepresent and falsify other truths in regard to the acts of his administration as Governor of the Empire State. His veto of Assembly bill No. 58, commonly known as the "Elevated Railroad Five Cent Fare Bill," in March, 1884, is the act which has been most prominently urged against him during the campaign to influence the laboring classes. It is safe to predict, however, that none of his opponents will dare to state in detail the reasons which the Governor gave for his veto, or mention all the circumstances under which it was proposed to reduce the fares on the New York elevated roads to five cents. The bill forbade the collection of more than five cents fare between the Battery and Harlem on any elevated railroad. For the past two years, by an act of the Legislature, the railroads have been compelled to transport men of the day, from 5.30 a. m. to 8.30 a. m., and from 5.30 p. m. to 8.30 p. m., to carry passengers for 5 cents, and these hours were specially fixed to accommodate the laboring classes living the hours for their going to and from work. This bill was to make the fare 5 cents all day long, and was confessedly gotten up and urged by Wall street people who were buying the Elevated Railroad stocks, although a popular agitation was cleverly worked up to aid their schemes.

Impressed with its importance, and aware of the public interest which it had excited, the Governor canvassed the greatest care and made most diligent inquiry into the measure before rendering his decision, which he gave, finally, in a veto message, setting forth his views with great fulness. "I am convinced," he said, "that in all cases the above which falls upon the Executive requiring the legislation of the State should be in no manner evaded, but fairly met by the exercise of the executive prerogative and unbiased judgment. In his conclusion he may err, but if he has fairly and honestly acted, he has performed his duty and has given to the people of the State his best observe. Then, in justification of his veto, he gave a history of the elevated roads and the agreements made between them and the State and city of New York.

In 1878 an act was passed, known as the rapid transit act, creating a Board of Commissioners (to be appointed by the Mayor of New York City) with power to regulate various matters in connection with the elevated roads. The Board was appointed, and they made a special agreement with the company that it should charge for any distance less than five miles not more than ten cents, and not more than two cents for each additional mile or fraction of a mile. It was further agreed that the company should, between 5.30 and 8.30 in the morning and evening, run what was known as "commuters" trains, for the benefit of workingmen going or coming from their work, on which not more than five cents fare should be charged from the Battery to Fifty-ninth street, and not more than two cents from the Battery to Harlem. It was still further agreed that when the net income of the road, after all expenditures, taxes and charges were paid, should amount to a dividend of 10 per cent. on the capital stock of the company, then, or within six months thereafter, the company should run trains at all hours of the day at reduced rates. These agreements were reported by the Board of Commissioners to the Mayor, and, in the fall of 1875, they were approved by the Board of Aldermen. The New York Elevated Railway Company thereupon reduced its road to Harlem, a distance of ten miles.

"The bill before me," said the Governor, "provides that, notwithstanding all the statutes that have been passed, and all that has been done thereunder, passengers shall be carried the whole length of the road for 5 cents, a sum much less than is provided for in any of such statutes or stipulated in the proceedings of the Commissioners. I am of the opinion that in the legislative proceedings which I have detailed, and in the fact that pursuant thereto the road of the company was constructed and finished, there exists a contract in favor of this company which is protected by that clause in the Constitution of the United States which prohibits the passage of a law by any State impairing the obligation of contract.

The Governor went on to say that, even if this view of the case were incorrect, section thirty-three of the general railroad act provided that the Legislature may, when any road has been opened for use, from time to time, alter or reduce the rates of freight, fare, or other profits upon and of the road, but no such action shall act, without the consent of the company, be so great as to bring the profits on the invested capital to less than 10 per cent. per annum, and this reduction shall not be made except upon an examination by the State Engineer and Surveyor and Comptroller, showing that in the year next preceding such reduction the profits from all sources shall have exceeded an annual income of 10 per cent. on the capital actually expended. "Even if the State has the power," continued the Governor, "to reduce the rates of fare upon these roads, it has agreed not to do so except under certain circumstances, and after a certain examination. I am not satisfied that these circumstances exist, and it is conceded that no such examination has been made. The consideration of objections urged by those opposed to the bill under consideration are not, I think, removed by the claim that the proposed legislation is in the nature of an alteration of the charters of these companies, and that this is permitted by the State Constitution and by the provisions of some of the laws to which I have referred I suppose. But, while the charters of corporations may be altered or repealed, it must be done in subordination to the Constitution of the United States, the supreme law of the land. This leads to the conclusion that the alteration of a charter can not be made the pretext for a law which impairs the obligation of contracts."

In addition to these reasons Gov. Cleveland said that to arbitrarily reduce the fares under the circumstances existing would be a breach of faith on the part of the State and a betrayal of confidence which the State had invited. For many years rapid transit was the great need of the people of New York City. The Legislature, appreciating the situation, passed statutes which gave encouraging schemes which promised a solution of the problem. Capitalists were induced to invest their money, and rapid transit had but lately become an accomplished fact, but much of the risk and burden attending the maintenance of the roads was yet unknown and threatening. In conclusion the Governor said: "We have engaged in our keeping the honor and faith of a great State, and we should see to it that no suspicious attributes, through any act of ours, to the fair fame of the commonwealth. The State should not only be strictly just but scrupulously fair."

In refusing to sign what was known as the "Car-Drivers' Bill," limiting the hours of labor of street-car drivers and conductors to twelve hours for a day's work, Gov. Cleveland did his foreman no record. While the bill made twelve hours a day's work for drivers and conductors, it did not in any way prohibit the making of a contract between the corporations and its employes requiring more number of hours' work. The Governor called attention to this point, and further remarked in his veto message, setting forth his views with great fulness: "I am convinced," he said, "that in all cases the above which falls upon the Executive requiring the legislation of the State should be in no manner evaded, but fairly met by the exercise of his official prerogative and unbiased judgment. BLAINES LETTERS.

He Writes to Fisher in Regard to Little Rock and Fort Smith.

"I Do Not Feel that I Shall Prove a Doubtful Friend."

As there is a general interest in Mr. Blaine just now in consequence of his nomination for the Presidency, the following charming effusions from his versatile pen will be read with great avidity. They are especially interesting from the fact that Mr. Blaine showed in them that he has an eye to business, and was not above wasting a minute penny out of the Speakership, over and above the salary pertaining to the office. The letters were written in regard to stock in the Little Rock and Fort Smith Railroad and addressed to Warren Fisher, a railroad capitalist and millionaire, of Boston. The following is the first of the series:

WASHINGTON, June 26, 1869.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: I have received the article from Mr Lewis. Have read it half and with its good. The writer has a mass of large intelligence and comprehension.

Your view is admit me to a participation in this enterprise is very flattering to me. I am not in the habit of speculating in railroad stocks, but I wish you very sincerely to it, and in the connection I wish to make a suggestion. It is a common selfish character.

You know of Mr. Caldwell disposing of a share of his interest to you. If he really desires to do a kindness to me, he can do it without any cost to himself by giving to you the share of stock. Perhaps if he waits till the full development of the enterprise, he might consider himself in part with his share; and I do not by this mean any disposal of mine.

I do not feel that I shall prove a doubtful friend to the enterprise, and I wish to be in a position where I can do a friend's part.

Very hastily and sincerely your friend.

Mr. Fisher, India street, Boston.

The second letter expresses Mr. Blaine's appreciation of Mr. Fisher's "liberal mode of dealing" and underlies with his office, in relation to the railroad enterprise. But Mr. Blaine is not so well pleased with the treatment of one of Mr. Fisher's associates, Mr. Joseph Caldwell:

WASHINGTON, CITY, AUGUSTA, July 2, 1869.

MY DEAR MR. FISHER: You ask me if I am acquainted with the other parties who are in the Little Rock enterprise.

Of course, I am more than satisfied with the character of Mr. Caldwell. I have known him for years. I am, most truly your friend.

JAMES BLAINE.

Gov. Cleveland's Simple Habits.

Gov. Cleveland has distinguished himself since he became Chief Magistrate of the Empire State by the simplicity of his tastes. An Albany letter, referring to the fact:

The Governor, it must be understood, has such Democratic tastes, or such ordinary inclinations, that he does not keep a carriage. He is the first Governor who has occupied the present magnificent mansion with its great stable facilities, and he keeps neither coach nor horses. Tilden had a splendid stud, and the old gentleman was as accomplished a horseman as Gen. Grant. He had several turnouts, but left them for his household to use, always provided with a coachman. Governor Robinson had a very modest turnout, and his son Dave occasionally spread himself, and caused no little comment among the charming ladies, coachee, footman, and gear, and a Connell crest on his panels. But our Democratic Governor makes no pretensions to state, and he is plain Mr. Cleveland.

Here we have the character of a true cultured—Democratic in the core. There is no ambition for vulgar display, but in all things a refined taste, a simplicity of manners and the core becomes so hopeless that Uncle Sam's agents throughout the States are to farmers, and everywhere, when in office, exert their influence in favor of Democratic simplicity and against the gaudy display.

Assaults Upon Cleveland.

Some of the Blaine organs have taken to assaulting an unknown correspondent of a notorious source upon Mr. Cleveland's character. It is wholly unnecessary, as the alleged conduct as a private individual, and because they indulged in such a mark will be overlooked in the public life.

But what crowd the Blaine organs intend going into this line means remains to be seen. It is the absence of any scandal impeaching his official or private life. Nothing can be made from the gutters and sewers of society and filing it at him is very grim. Should they yield, the temptation to retaliate will be equally great.

Innocent or not, Mr. Blaine has not escaped the unpleasant implication of his name, nor escaped the charge that he is a man of large and generous nature, which would make his supporters hesitate to vote for a man so related about him. Hubertis on enemy or friend of his has conspired them as big, sure weapons of warfare, and they will be sorely tried and retaliated beyond endurance if their opponents before they indulge in the kind.

But when they do, we make bold to say that the assailants of Mr. Cleveland will be sorely tried, and the charges will be retaliated by equally damaging ones, and the public disgust will be the result.

We would respectfully call the attention of anti-monopolists to the fact that the National Democratic Party is the only party in Old Company, which is now trying to give a big monopoly a big slice of the public domain, which fought with might and main at Albany last winter to defeat the general surface railroad bill, and that in the Democratic ranks are found the general and a liber right in the face of the most powerful and corrupt monopoly this country has ever known.—New York Times (Rep.)

BLAINE was active in turning the Republican party over to the Know Nothings when the cry of down with the foreigner was raised. Still we are informed by certain fools that the Irish will all vote for Blaine.

"I AM simply waiting," says John Kelly, "until I can get out of politics the easiest way." With the whole Democratic party waiting on his shoulders only chance seems to be to hire a derrick and lift them off.

GOV. HENDRICKS.

He Formally Accepts the Nomination to the Vice Presidency.

Some Incidents of the Notification—Impressive Ceremonies—The Speeches.

The notification committee of the Democratic National Convention notified Gov. Hendricks this morning, July 9, to wait on ex-Gov. Hendricks, who, with his wife, is spending a few days at the Ebbitt House. During the forenoon a delegation of the committee visited Mr. Hendricks, and learned that he would be pleased to receive the committee at 2 o'clock. Long before the time for the ceremony to take place the parlors of the hotel was filled with ladies and gentlemen, who had come to see the notification, around the space reserved for the committee. At 2 o'clock the committee marched in a body and was followed immediately by Mr. Hendricks, who took a position in the room. Mr. Vilas then addressing Mr. Hendricks, said:

Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, the great leader of the Democratic party, the statesman of the Union, tried at Chicago with the hopes of millions, constituted his nominee for Vice-President, for a second time over the several States and Territories of our country, and unanimously he was chosen. Not since the early days of the Republic, when the great Jefferson was chosen a second time to the Presidency, has such a tribute been paid to a public man. Not since the days of Jefferson has such a tribute been paid to a public man. Not since the days of Jefferson, if I mistake not, has such a tribute been paid to a public man by the Democratic party, to the people to be their Vice President, and to be the President of the Senate of the United States.

That honorable duty we have journeyed hither from every quarter of the Union to do, and I assure you it is a pleasant duty, and I assure you, Mr. Hendricks, we have come from the remotest quarters of the Union to do this duty, and we have come to do it with a great zeal. We have come to do it with a great zeal, and we have come to do it with a great zeal, and we have come to do it with a great zeal, and we

East Jordan.

Building at East Jordan has begun again in earnest. The Stoepel Lumber Co. have their large new barn well along. A. B. Keene's new building is progressing finely; when finished it will be occupied by F. Lewenberg as a dry goods and clothing store. Ground has been broken for a skating rink 50x100 feet, just north of Mr. Porter's house, on Main street; Will A. Stone is "head pusher."

Next Saturday the steamer Friant will leave East Jordan at 1 p. m. with an excursion party for Mackinac island, stopping at the landings on the "arm" and at Charlevoix. As the picnic will be under the management of the band, all lovers of excursions are anticipating a good time.

The Nellie Booth brought a party from Boyne last Sunday.

The people here miss the Gazelle more than would be supposed; though her trips have been so regular through all kinds of weather, that her service should be appreciated.

The stamper Wright, running in connection with the Friant, is doing a good passenger business, as resorters and others from Petoskey can come to East Jordan and return the same day.

A large and lively excursion party from Boyne, under the auspices of the I. O. G. T., visited East Jordan Tuesday evening. They returned home "sober" at a seasonable hour.

Burgess.

Levi House, the model farmer of Hayes, has a mowing machine and silky rake.

Mr. Wilkes, of Charlevoix, visited with his son-in law, Frank Kane, last Sunday.

James Bartlett addressed a crowded house at Whitford's school house last Saturday, at which time another Butler club was organized.

Elvin Hale and wife visited friends in South Arm last week.

I. S. Webster and wife visited friends in Boyne and Evelina last Friday and Saturday.

Moses Cooper entertained friends last Sunday in his usual hospitable manner.

Green corn and cholera morbus have made their appearance in Hayes.

Your correspondent thinks the greenbackers are getting crazier than ever in Hayes. [Don't believe it.—Ed.] They will even talk politics on Sunday.

Ironton.

The John Otis came in Sunday loaded with ore and vegetables, for the Pine Lake Iron Co.

Mr. C. G. Ratcliffe who has been in town a short time, has returned to Chicago.

The "hose" fisherman of Ironton was beaten two to one Saturday last.

Scarlet fever continues here. Two or three children have it in a mild form.

Mr. J. G. Peterson has gone to Grand Rapids this week.

INSCRIBED TO THE KNIGHTS OF LABOR.

BY A. TOILER.

The Knights of Labor, Jim, are coming,
Their shackles they've thrown off,
And rest assured these garments old
In pound cemetery they'll doff.

Their weekly meetings you may see
In rooms above the liner,
For they have got the idea, Jim,
That they are slaves no more.

Some one has told them this:
"The laborer is worthy of his hire;"
And every week they send this note,
And send it loud and higher:

But what d'you think will control it?
Says Jim, with look of bright
I'll tell you what, old fellow, it's a breeze
That O, shake the dills of night.

I know these boys, my friends, too well,
To think they'll let up now
When all the platforms that are writ
Aren't worth a linker's vow.

And now look out, friend Jim, I say,
For you will see, I'll bet,
A bigger storm of snow-flakes fall,
Than you have seen as yet.

They're coming from the workshops, Jim,
And from each hill and vale,
And let your boots, old fee, they'll beat
And thrash the shekers with flail.

Some look on Devil's whispers them,
Some look on them as a joke,
But when the time is ripe for a parley,
You cannot hear it thunder,"

But, Jim, the time is coming soon,
When all these bodies will be of a party,
Will stand erect and claim their dues,—
They're lackeys to the fashionable.

And don't forget, old boy, this thing,
That they will pull together,
And make the mighty welkin ring
On the idea of next November.

G. A. R. PICNIC.

Overlooking Pine lake, at Horton's bay, is a location with an easy descent toward the lake, covered with a vigorous growth of hard maple trees,—just the place one would select for a basket picnic. Its central location, its beauty, and its many other advantages for such an occasion, is no doubt the reason it was selected by the committee from the various posts, G. A. R., in this county, in which to hold their first annual camp-fire, reunion, and picnic.

The large and commodious side-wheel steamer, Queen of the Lakes, (by the way one of the best excursion boats on these lakes), was chartered for the day, and started from Charlevoix with nearly 200 passengers, arriving at the grounds soon after 9:00 o'clock. Then going to Boyne, she returned in time for dinner with another large party.

The Wright brought a party of over a hundred from East Jordan, and the Nellie Booth a smaller party from Boyne and Bay Springs.

After the veterans had received all these people they were tired and hungry, and it did not require a second invitation to get the baskets opened and contents spread on the commodious tables previously erected by the local committee. It is estimated that over 500 people sat down to dinner.

The reporter and wife were invited to dine with Mr. and Mrs. Frank Shaulut, and right there is where we got in our best work. Frank has a reputation as a "good provider," and Mrs. S. understands well how to serve her guests, so we were partially prepared for the good things. But this occasion was "extra," and we were not prepared for the feast. In addition to a very large quantity of sandwiches, cakes, pies, and the usual strawberries of a basket picnic, there had been prepared a roast pig—dressed, stuffed, and roasted whole. It was fat and tender, and with the dressing was well seasoned and cooked. It was carved by Capt. J. S. Wyckoff, distributed at that and other tables, and relished by a large number of people.

Other tables were also well provided with substantial eatables, and after all were satisfied, the fragments left would have filled several large baskets.

To Mrs. A. J. Stroud, of Horton's Bay, is due the thanks of the picnic party for providing her tea and coffee with milk and sugar for all who wished.

Not content with simply "something to eat," Messrs. M. J. Steckman, Robert Miller, Sam See, H. Boylan, Bert Brown, Wm. Kanagy, Wm. Atchison, E. P. Hodge, and Mr. Litzau proposed to have a true veteran dinner. Lighting a camp-fire, they proceeded to boil their own coffee, roast their "cow-boby" and eat hardtack, singing songs, and telling stories. Mr. Steckman was in his usual happy mood, and created much merriment by taking the head of Shaulut's pig by the snout, and passing around among the veterans, offer to each a chance to take a bite; some of whom did as if they had seen nothing to eat in a month.

A. J. Stroud also passed around large quantities of baked pork and beans, which went off lively.

After dinner the following program of exercises was followed:

Appropriate Songs by a time Club organized for the occasion.

Address of Welcome, by Rev. T. J. Hill, of Boyne City, Mich.

Music by East Jordan Cornet Band.

Response by Col. Jas. Shaver, of Stevens post.

Response by Co. Wm. Weaver, of Cowles post.

Response by Maj. E. H. Green, of Baxter post.

Phonomimic Speeching by Veterans, interspersed with vocal and instrumental music.

Recitation, "Sheridan's Ride," by Mrs. Lucy Boles, of Bay Springs, with a historical introduction by Mrs. Ella Wright.

"Memories of the War," by Hr. H. P. Snyder.

Guard Mounting, Dress Parade, pistols, by Baldwin, sabre Hancock drill, by Gillespie.

These exercises continued until time for Boyne and East Jordan people to start for home; and Charlevoix people were ready to go as soon as the "Queen" could return from Boyne.

This is the first general reunion of the veterans in this county, and it was in every way so successful that others will be sure to follow. It is also intimated, though we have no positive information on the subject, that the veterans alone, without their families, will have a campfire at least one day and a night, with many adjuncts of a soldier's life, at some place in the county this fall.

The success of this picnic is due to the excellent committee of arrangements from all the posts, ably seconded by a local committee at Horton's Bay, consisting of Messrs. Stroud, Jenkins, and Olde, with their wives. The arrangements for transportation were as complete as possible with the number of boats at command, and the grounds were fitted up with speaker's stand, plenty of benches, tables, swings, and other accessories necessary to the occasion.

Stevens post carry a large, handsome banner. The body is red cashmere, with gold border, trimmings, and tassels. In the center is worked in red, white, and blue silk, the emblem of the order, with the words, "Stevens Post, No. 66, G. A. R." As a whole, it is the finest banner in the order in the county, and reflects great credit on the ladies who made and presented it to the post.

At Boyne, the day's services concluded with a dance at Lewis hall in the evening.

Maj. E. H. Green, and Adjt. Frank Shaulut, of Baxter post, were enthusiastic promoters of the picnic, and to their efforts is due no small share of its success. No doubt others were equally enthusiastic, but their work was not brought so directly to our notice.

There was a noticable absence of liquor and its attendant results, rowdyism, or anything of a nature to mar the pleasure of the visitors.

It is intimated that Robt. Miller takes the lead as a coffee boiler. His pot of this beverage was clear and strong.

The ladies' aid society, of Horton's Bay, have been purchasing an organ and on Wednesday, with a lemonade stand they made quite enough to pay a balance of $20 to clear it from debt.

Mrs. Wilson, 72 years old, mother of Mrs. Plummer, of Bay Springs, visited the picnic Wednesday, and enjoyed the exercises. This lady sent five boys to the war, lost two in battle, and one soon after returning home.

C. E. Baldwin, photo. artist, took two negatives of the G. A. R. boys and citizens, while in line. When finished, the pictures will be 10x12 in size.

E. Carpenter feels well paid for his day at the picnic. His largest brook trout, caught in Horton's creek weighed 2 pounds 7 ounces, and measured 19½ inches in length. Can anyone report a better one.

Real Estate Transfers.

Reported for the Journal by Urbane Bliss, real estate dealer.

The following is a list of transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, for the week ending Tuesday evening, August 19, 1884, as recorded in the office of register of deeds:

A. H. Copland and wife to Nancy M. Pendey, part of s ½ of s ½ of section 25, T 33 N, R 7 W, $200.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

THE valuation of the property of the city of Boston, as returned by the assessors is $806,918,400, and the rate of taxation is $17 on $1,000, which is the highest ever known. The decrease in valuation in the last ten years amounts to $146,000,000. George W. Jacobs & Son, extensive manufacturers at Philadelphia, made an assignment and Messrs. Field & Co., owners of the Hope Woolen Mill at Allentown, Pa., failed for $100,000 for pending socialist proclamations, three men were fined $5 each at New York. A nationwide Communistic paid the fines.

A SEVERE shock of earthquake was felt along the Atlantic coast on the afternoon of the 10th inst., extending from Philadelphia to Portland, Maine, and as far inland as Cleveland. The shock lasted about ten seconds and caused very serious alarm, particularly in New York City. No serious damage was done, though houses were badly shaken and some chimneys were cracked. The people in the tenement-house districts were almost frightened out of their wits, children screamed, women fainted, and prayers and imprecations were mingled before the shock heavy, dark rain-clouds appeared in the sky and there was a rush of wind and then a heavy rain fell for an hour. Before the shock heavy, dark rain-clouds appeared in the sky and there was a rush of wind and then a heavy rain fell for an hour. All at once some hours before the people got over their fright. Many nervous persons were prostrated by the occurrence. A second shock was felt at noon.

THE Wall Street Bank of New York has closed its doors. The shortage is said to be about $200,000 and was caused by the cashier, J. P. Dickinson, absconding with some of the stock-cuts of the institution.

THE New York State Labor Convention, which met at Utica last week, adopted resolutions in favor of a mechanics' lien law which would give mechanics a first claim on buildings and structures, the abolition of the "truck system," the enforcement of weekly payments; the establishment of a State printing office; the reduction of the hours of work per day to four; and the prohibition of child labor. It was urged that the immigrant per capita tax be increased to $10, the money to be used for the benefit of the immigrants.

THE old Beach Street Theater Building, at Boston, occupied by three manufacturing firms, was destroyed by fire, two firemen perishing in the flames. The financial loss is about $70,000.... The business portion of North East, Pa., burned, including hotels, banks, a church, and other structures, resulting in a loss of $480,000.

THE WEST.

GOV. GLICK, of Kansas, has called a meeting of the Live-Stock Sanitary Commission, in consequence of the appearance of Texas fever in the State, to devise ways and means to prevent the spread of the epidemic. He has invited the railroad superintendents and the cattle-yard Superintendents to join with him in the State to the meeting.... Texas fever is killing cattle at Lenox, Iowa, the disease having been brought there by cattle shipped from Kansas....

J. D. Dean & Sons, lumber merchants, doing business at Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Cumberland, Wis., have made an assignment. The debts are $42,000; the assets $21,000.... A runaway horse dragged ex-Sheriff Colbath and Mrs. Leatherman on to the railway track at Lima, Ohio, and a switching engine killed both of them, the horse escaping.... The police of Mattoon, Ill., have issued orders forbidding bales to wear Mother Hubbard dresses, unlaced, under penalty of arrest.

A DISPATCH from Helena, Montana, says: "Meager paterollers are received of another slaughter of horse-thieves in the Musselshell region, 150 miles northwest of here, last week by outlaws. While in pursuit of stolen horses a big posse was discovered in the timber on the mountain-side. It was secretly surrounded a day or two, during which time several small parties of men came and went, some by day and others by night, having in their possession horses evidently stolen. It becoming evident that it was horse-thieves' rendezvous, the cordon congealed, and last Monday night carried up to the house and attacked it. Fourteen horse-thieves were shot the premises at the time. Nine were killed and five escaped. The cabin was set fire to and burned."

THE Iowa State Veterinary Surgeon pronounces the disease which has appeared among the cattle in the vicinity of Lenox to be Texas fever. He says that he has no fear of the spread of the contagion if ordinary precautions are taken. ..John C. S. Harrison, the Indianapolis banker, has been indicted by the grand jury for embezzlement. His bail is reduced to $10,000, and the police were withdrawn from his house when the bond was signed by his brother-in-law.

THE Treasury Department has issued orders to Collectors of Customs that whenever a vessel carrying rags arrives at any port it shall be the duty of the inspector to produce positive evidence that the cargo is from non-infected port, and is free from the germs of disease. The difficulty of producing such evidence virtually prevents the introduction of rags.... John B. Dawson, a clerk in the Pension Bureau at Washington, died last week. He weighed 52 pounds, and his body had to be placed in a grape arbor until a coffin could be made.

MISS SARAH BRUSH, residing near Wyandotte, Kas., found screams for help from the room in her residence occupied by Henry Jones, a friend of the family. She pushed open the door and found Glass surrounded by flames, his head having caught fire. He was unable to move. While she was dragging him out of the room the fire reached a shotgun standing in the room. The gun was discharged, the contents striking Mrs. Brush in the face and inflicting a fatal wound. Glass may survive.

NEAR Scott Porte, Ohio, three children, under 10 years, were burned to death in a barn which they fired while smoking.

THE Democratic State Convention of Georgia met at Atlanta and made the following nominations: Governor, H. D. McDaniel; Secretary of State, N. C. Barnett; Comptroller, W. A. Wright; Treasurer, R. A. Hardman; Attorney-General, Clifford Anderson. The nominees, with the exception of Hardman, are the present incumbents.

The Republicans of Michigan in convention at Detroit, nominated Gen. R. A. Alger for Governor and C. A. Lafer for Lieutenant Governor. The rest of the ticket stand as follows, the incumbents being renominated in each case: Harry A. Cream, Secretary of State; Edward B. Butler, State Treasurer; William C. Stevens, Auditor Gen.; Miss Nora M. Cummissioner of State Land Office; Moses Taggart, Attorney General; Hiram Ducat, Superintendent of Public Instruction; James M. Ballou, member of the State Board of Education.... The Democratic State Convention of Missouri, in session at Jefferson City, made the following nominations: For Governor, J. S. Marmaduke, of St. Louis; for Auditor, John Walker, the present incumbent; for Register of Lands, Robert Woolfolk, present incumbent; for Judge of Supreme Court, Joseph Brown. The Republican State Central Committee of Arkansas nominated a full State ticket, as follows: Governor, Thomas Boles; Secretary of State, Paul Groham; Auditor, J. R. Berry; Treasurer, S. A. Duker; Land Commissioner, J. A. Thomas; Attorney General, Jacob Trieber; Superintendent of Public Instruction, J. H. Ward.

THE SOUTH.

G. H. HULL & CO., of Louisville, have addressed a circular to the jug-trade men of Pittsburgh, asking them to wait till the Pittsburgers in the country for four weeks, in order to increase the price to justify them in the production. A fire which broke out in a warehouse at Pittsburgh, Tenn., destroyed five large barn buildings. James McGregor, David Kinney, and John Gillem were caught under the falling walls of the burning buildings and killed. Robert Miller and Samuel Kelly were badly injured. Some others were seriously hurt.

WASHINGTON.

THE Postmaster General will personally inspect the fortunes at Hartford and Springfield, where statement is made for the Government under contract. It is believed that frauds to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars have been perpetrated, with the collusion of Government inspectors.

GEN. HAZEN was interviewed at Washington concerning the charges of cruelty to Indians in connection with the Grely expedition. Although the reports were somewhat exaggerated, he said, there was no doubt that there is considerable foundation for them. He said that it is not the time that Capt. Schley told himself and Secretary Chandler that the sailors had taken the bodies of their associates in the Greely party to Lifeless Island, and there had left them. The circumstances occurred years ago. The women in question was at that time thirty or forty years old and had two children.

A WASHINGTON dispatch to the Chicago Times says that Gen. Grant will support Blaine and Logan, and will, in all probability, take an active part in the campaign. "Mr. Conkling," says the same authority, "has decidedly softened to his antipathy to the Blaine or his canvass. He is reported to have said some kind things of Logan who is one of his old and warm friends, but for Blaine he has only the bitterest and most biting sarcasm. Nothing is rather incline to favor Hatter's candidacy."

MR. HARRY STORER delivered the opening address of the Maine Republican campaign at Lake Maranocook, and made a short speech. Among the orators of the occasion were Hanson A. Storer of Philadelphia, Col. Snowdon of Philadelphia, Gen. Hobbs, and Congressman Hoyt. The Democrats of the Seventh Illinois District nominated James S. Ewing for Congress. The Republicans of the Third District of Michigan placed James O'Donnell on the ticket. The Republican Executive Committee of the Indiana Probibition party decided to put an electoral ticket in the field.

THE Hon. W. E. Fuller has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Fourth Iowa District. Maj. Conger, of Dallas county, was nominated for Congress in the Seventh Iowa District by the Republicans. J. J. Johnson has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Ninth Iowa District. He lost John Cook, Democrat, in 1882 by 5,000 votes. Boston Stevenson was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Fifth New Jersey District.

GENERAL.

AN extraordinary scene was enacted one day, lately in Sheldon's office in South Norwalk, Conn. Two men, who had been married to one woman, and who had lived with her at the same time, in different places, for years, were introduced to each other by her husband, who had married her while her husband was in the State Prison. The woman, who had been married to the prisoner while he was in the State Prison, and who had lived with the husband who had married her while her husband was in the State Prison, was present. Applause and laughter followed the introduction, and the husband, who had married the woman while her husband was in the State Prison, and who had lived with the husband who married her while her husband was in the State Prison, and who had married the woman while her husband was in the State Prison, and who had married the woman while her husband was in the State Prison, and who had married the woman

For Vice President—
THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, of Indiana.

Workingmen's Congressional Convention.

The workingmen's party of the sixth congressional district of Michigan, will meet in delegated convention on the 10th day of September, 1884, at one o'clock p. m. in the city of Ludington, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for congress, electing a new congressional committee, and transacting such other business as may properly come before the convention. The representation will be as follows, (subject to revision by the convention:)

Amelia	4	Muskegon	3
Charlevoix	3	Newaygo	10
Kalkaska	2	Oceana	5
Mecosta	6	Ottawa	8
Lake	2	Osceola	5
Manistee	7	Oceola	5

Dated at Muskegon, Aug. 6, 1884.

F. W. COOK,
Chairman committee, Muskegon.

THE WINNING TICKET.

Our delegates to the state convention at Grand Rapids, Mr. J. Milo Eaton, made a quick trip, leaving Tuesday evening and returning this morning. The convention had nothing to fight over, but went to work, put a ticket in nomination, and returned to their homes to elect it.

And every man will be elected.

A combination was effected on a basis similar to that of two years ago, so far as applied to state officers, and the electoral ticket was divided by each party naming six electors to be voted for by both parties, with a second man for their own party alone, the proportion of votes in the electoral college to correspond to the party vote cast for the extra delegate.

ELECTORS:

H. O. Rose, Petoskey; W. H. Moran, Detroit; Flanders, Berrien; Rev. J. R. Savage, Manchester; A. Millard; Maj. Kelsey, Ionia; Moses W. Field, Detroit; Wildman Mills, Detroit; A. W. Hershaw, Alpena; Herman Gieschell, Saginaw; Fred Carnahan, Lansing; A. S. Dyckman, Van Buren; J. Watkins, Lapeer.

STATE TICKET.

Governor—Josiah W. Begole.
Lieutenant-Governor—Maynard, of Marquette
Attorney-General—F. W. Cook, of Muskegon.
Secretary of State—Wm. Shakespeare, of Kalamazoo.
Treasurer—James Blair, of Grand Rapids.
Auditor General—Geo. F. Sanford, of Lansing.
Superintendent of Public Instruction—Lewis Parsons, of Detroit.
Member of Board of Education—Vendervere of Grand Haven.

Most of these names are well known in state politics, and their record gives assurance of success at the polls, and of economy in their administration when elected.

Delegates.

At a convention held at the office of J. Milo Eaton, on Saturday, Aug. 16, the following delegates were elected:

To the state convention—J. Milo Eaton, H. A. Jersey; alternate, B. P. Ingalls.

To the senatorial convention—E. C. Pietersen, N. S. Card, A. R. Noyes.

To the representative convention—J. Milo Eaton, C. J. Sisson, O. D. Hilton, W. J. Lewis, Dan Jerome, F. J. Smith.

Notes and News.

The agricultural college at Lansing graduated 30 students this year.

The prohibitionists of Kent county have nominated a full ticket, including state senator.

The republican party strives to avoid the issues of to-day by fighting over the battles of twenty years ago.

The Michigan prohibitionists will hold their state convention at Lansing on Wednesday, August 27th.

Prohibitionists are getting tired of republican "taffy," and this year will put up a ticket of their own, and support it, too.

The letters of acceptance of Cleveland and Butler were given to the press this week. We expect they will appear in full in next week's Journal.

A scheme is on foot to have all the iron furnaces in the United States shut down about September first for four or six weeks. The cause of the step is overproduction.—G. R. Democrat.

John P. St. John, the prohibition candidate for president, said in a speech at Port Jervis the other day that he had been a republican all his life up to the 4th of June last, but had never lost an opportunity to say and do a good thing for the cause of prohibition. But the action of the republican national convention in refusing to recognize the principles of temperance for fear of losing the whiskey vote, has led him to make up his mind that "republican whiskey is as bad as democratic whiskey if not worse."

It is said that Gen. Alger stands in the same position Gov. Jerome did two years ago. He is a liquor man running on a temperance platform. The two do not harmonize, and Alger's chances for defeat are excellent.

The prohibition plank in the republican platform gives offense to two factions. Liquor men will bolt the ticket because of this plank, and prohibitionists refuse to take the tempting bait after being "sold out" as they were two years ago.

"Tell the truth" was the prompt and fearless telegram of Grover Cleveland in response to inquiries of friends as to what they should say in reply to the assumts upon him. His letters are not a nightmare to him. "Tell the truth" is all he had to say.—G. R. Democrat.

An intimate friend of Gen. Butler, who is in correspondence with him, is authority for the statement that communications have passed between Blaine and Butler relative to the latter's entrance into Blaine's cabinet as secretary of state in the event of Blaine's election.—G. R. Democrat.

How is this about the Germans all going for Blaine? At the unveiling of the Beethoven statue in New York last Tuesday, the mention of Cleveland's name was received with the most uproarious applause by the 20,000 Germans present, but not a hurrah was heard for Blaine.—Chicago News.

It is intimated that various republican politicians while they claim to deprecate the use of scandals as a campaign argument, are quietly using the Cleveland matter for all it is worth, and more. We would advise these gentlemen not to be too fast until they are quite sure their own candidates are immaculate.

Judging by interviews with leading liquor men and leading prohibitionists the republican convention was not so emasing as some of its members imagined, in readopting the prohibition plank of 1882. The liquor men on one hand regard it as an insult to themselves and as an attack upon the business by which they sustain their families. As one of the brewers said, it is "as much of bread and butter" to them. If a prohibitary amendment were applied in Michigan with anything like the vigor which character ized its enforcement in Iowa this summer, it would mean the loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the ruin of hundreds of persons whose only crime is the conduct of a business which is regarded by a very large element in the community as as quite as legitimate as any other. Not only all those engaged in this business, but internecitally all who are with them, are characterized as criminal, and the party is pledged to do all in its power to set the machinery of this state at work to extirpate the trade, root and branch. There can be no expectation, therefore, on the part of the state committee of much assistance from these "criminals." People who make or sell a glass of beer are given fair warning that the particular mission of the republican party in Michigan is to destroy their present means of livelihood and that they are expected to vote the republican ticket. But while the beer and liquor dealers are disgusted and affronted, Mr. Preston and his prohibition fellow-cranks are not charmed. They recall past promises made by the same party only to be broken, and they suspect the sincerity of an organization which made the same pledge two years ago and refused to keep it in the legislature. The prohibitionists will have a ticket of their own to vote for, and will vote for it according to their ambitions in the number of 25,000 to 40,000. If they reach the first figure, it seems to us that Gen. Alger will have pretty hard sledding to pull through, and will need the skill of Tim Keeler, and the potent influence of his own purse to reach the goal.

Salicylic Acid and Rheumatism.

It has been a pretty tough winter for me. I have not been free from rheumatism and colds the whole time, and I have taken enough medicine to stock a drugstore. And just here let me say that if ever you are troubled with rheumatism avoid salicylic acid. All the doctors prescribe it nowadays, and it certainly relieves rheumatism, but it leaves behind something that is worse than that painful complaint. During the winter I must have taken a pound of the medicine. It has destroyed my stomach, taken away my strength, and robbed me of twenty-five pounds of flesh, every one as dear to me as Shylock's. I have talked with many rheumatics, and, being young in the business, I have been laughed at unmercifully.

Mr. Blaine has suffered with rheumatism, so has John Chamberlain and Mr. Barlow, the art expert, and Mr. Conkling, ex-Senator from Colorado, and Mr. Spofford, husband of Harriett Prescott Spofford, and many others not known to fame whom I have consulted. And when I told them I had taken salicylic acid they each and all laughed in turn and said I was a fool. I know it now, and want to place it upon the record that salicylic acid is worse than rheumatism. It is a thing to be avoided.—Rawsdell, in Philadelphia Press.

An exchange mentions the benefits accruing from putting "common drunks" on the street to work out their sentence, in the absence of cash to pay their fine. How would such a thing work in Charlevoix?

Mackinac backmen have reduced their rates from almost anything to fifty cents an hour. A man can now see the sights of the island without being obliged to purchase a carriage, a pair of horses, and a driver.

J. S. Wyckoff has our thanks for a package of candy embellished with the portraits of Cleveland and Hendricks. He evidently believes in keeping up with the times, and buys the best and freshest of everything in his line.

Mr. Charles Ashley, son of president Ashley of the Toledo & Ann Arbor R. R. was in town on Tuesday last looking over the route for a northern terminus of the road. Mr. Ashley says the road will be built to some point on this shore, and he believes that should proper inducements be forthcoming, from the people along the line, that Charlevoix could be made the terminus. This is a matter of no little importance to the people of Charlevoix county and we hope to see those interested in such matters come to the front.—Enterprise.

The "Mother Hubbard" is doomed. A Grand Rapid clergymen sent a woman home who came to church in one of these freaks of fashion, and the authorities of Hillsboro, Ill., have decided to arrest persons wearing them on the streets as being guilty of a misdemeanor.

S. G. Isaman, of South Arm, has been awarded the contract for building the new state road. We are pleased to hear that Sol. got the contract as now we are sure that the road will be completed at the time specified if not before, and that it will be done in good shape.—Enterprise.

Stephen Rockafellow, superintendent of the Elk Rapids Iron Co.'s furnace, died Tuesday last week, of apoplexy. He leaves a wife and family. Funeral services Wednesday afternoon. The places of business of Dexter & Noble, and the iron and chemical companies were closed during the services.

It is queer how some people are inclined to take hints never intended for them, while those who are really hit never feel it in the least. News paper publishers particularly find this true. When a dun is published it is taken by those who always pay promptly, while the delinquents think it never means them.—Ex.

The Marquette Mining Journal June 25 says: The Trapper's daughter was played here last evening to a large audience, by one of the very best companies that have ever visited the city and there is a treat in store for people in towns where they will visit during the season. They will appear at the opera house, Monday evening, Aug. 25.

We have been greatly pleased while passing through different parts of the country to note the excellent crop prospects for all kinds of farm produce. Unless something unforseen should happen Emmet county will be blessed with immense crops this year, and were it not for the low prices due to the money stringency which our false systems of finance and taxation have brought upon the country our farmers would get a big lift this season.—Independent.

THE BABY'S PRAYER.

She knelt with her sweet hands folded;
Her fair little head bowed low;
While dead visions lapped as the shadow
And the air was thick with snow;
When the early dusk with whisper
Of him, hearing dusk with ease;
And the lady knelt by the bedside
Hearing the baby pray.

"Bless all whom I love, dear Father,
And let no one be good," she said.
Then, stirred by a sudden memory,
She added the soldier lad.
Up the stairs and down the maids
Paused to hear the old, old prayer,
Of the lamb of the woodland blossoms,
The lilies of the snow betweed.

"The beautiful lady," she whispered,
"Where the angels are singing all day,
"Her one friend in the cold, cold winter,
Oh, take her to heaven in spring!
And the flowers that I loved to gather,
Let her go to them again to-day.
The dear little violets, sleeping
Down deep in the silent beds."

Ah, truth may be chill with snow-flakes,
And hearts may be cold with care;
But wisdom of a frozen silence
Are helpless in the baby's prayer;
And the lady wept dumb with sorrow
As the pitiful voice ceased to plead;
Each earth is wrapped in a silence
In the hush of the Lord to asleep.

HATTIE'S LESSON.

BY SARA B. DUNN.

"Oh, girls, there is the loveliest fellow coming here to board; he has the killingest eyes, and the darlingest mustache! he is awfully rich, and one of the sweetest lawyers in Chicago besides, so well have some musical that is worth our while to practice on now," cried Hattie Linton, as she came bounding into my boarding house parlor with a satisfied sparkle in her big gray eyes. "Is that so?" exclaimed Belle Linton, opening her blonde eyelids a little wider than usual. "I am tired of it, Marshfield Corners is fearfully dull this summer. But what brings Adonis to this out-of-the-way place?"

"Squire Graham's big lawsuit!" said Hattie, breathlessly. "And he is the handsomest man I think that I ever saw, and I have had an introduction to him, too," with a triumphant nod.

"But where did you meet him? And what's his name?" inquired matter-of-fact Jessie Albright.

"His name is Mr. Eiglone, and I met him at the station this morning. I went down with papa, you know, and he came in on the train. Papa had met him somewhere before, and he asked papa for a good boarding place, and papa directed him here, and he introduced him to me, too."

"I believe Hattie Linton has an understanding with her father to make her acquainted with every masculine he meets," said Martha Mason, with a little scorning laugh. "And I believe the two will never cease until some poor fellow falls a victim."

"I'll requit Mr. Linton of any such foul intent," said Belle, a little spitefully. "He was down on Hattie's one sided love affairs as he can possibly be."

Belle was Hattie's cousin, and therefore thought herself posted.

"Do-side!!" cried Hattie, in indignant scorn. "Just wait until you see Mr. Eiglone, and then judge whether he idolizes me or not."

"At this stage," cried Martha, "I wager a half million, Hat Linton, that you brought that stranger in your papa's carriage from the station."

"I did no such thing," replied Hattie, enjoying the girls' evident jealousy. "I was not going to leave the poor fellow to walk seven miles afoot this warm morning."

"Let him walk it in the stage, then," said Belle. "It was not at all proper of you, cousin."

"Who cares for proper?" laughed Hattie. "I am just going for that handsome lawyer, and you girls, can't get near me, so try it, if you dare."

"Hattie is pretty sure. She must have fascinated him somehow," said Jessie.

"I have created him with my eye, so, girls' he is my property, and hands off, if you please."

So saying, Hattie ran up stairs to her mother's room to remove her hat and driving gloves.

Hattie Linton was a light-hearted, gay young girl of the period, who made flirtation the first aim of her youthful existence. She was an only daughter, and had been petted far more than was good for her, and as her father had business in the city during the week and her mother was an invalid, she did just almost as she pleased and sometimes said she pleased, would have shocked one not acquainted with Hattie Linton.

She was very pretty and had managed to work up the girls where she resided, including her cousin Belle, to a fever heat of jealousy, and now she kept continually guessing them with exaggerated versions of her conquests, until more than one of them secretly hated her.

The array of pretty toilets that evening laid Hattie; she was not the only fright who would enter the lists, but her dainty pink costume held its own against the fascinations of Belle's pale blue, Martha's white, and Jessie's black tissue with glimpses of fretted ribbon among her black lace."

Hattie gave them a little nod as she entered, as much as to say, "I defy you," and then after introducing the young ladies began an entirely original conversation with Mr. Eiglone.

This gentleman was not at all shaken by his fluttering reception, and deliberately scanned each of the four young ladies with these killing black eyes, but gave to Hattie the victory by offering her his arm when tea was announced, and seating himself by her at table.

The old ladies at Mrs. Thompson's boarding house spared their eyes very wide when Hattie went out upon the street with the stranger that evening, leaving the other girls to their own devices.

"Did you ever?" cried Mrs. Mason, in a jealous tone. "I would teach Hattie Linton something if she was my girl."

"She means nothing," said Mrs. Thompson, who was not a gossiping busybody, but sharp enough to know what had been said, only, however, to make the willful girl more bent on plaguing them than ever, and she exerted all her powers to fascinate the handsome lawyer, who, in return, made flattering speeches, and eyes pathetic enough to impress a heart of polished steel.

Hattie related with a great deal of "pouting lisping" all of these compliments and idle flattery to the jealous girls, who in turn hinted it over with their equally jealous mothers, until there was a quiet undercurrent going the rounds ready to hook out any suspicious moment into a fulsome tale of scandal.

Hattie was greatly elated at the jealous looks cast upon her, and fully believed that she would have at least "an offer" to tell of before Mr. Eiglone left town, but some way he did not come to the point; but on the next evening he said to Hattie.

"Shall you be going to see me when I come down again, Miss Hattie?

Hattie's heart gave a great jump as she thought, "Is he in earnest," and then said, demurely—

"Very fine, but I thought your business was over?"

"And did you think I should forget the charming acquaintance I have made here because my business was finished?"

Hattie blushed and was silent; and he, knowing exactly what was in her mind, strove to make the parting as pleasant as possible, without saying anything definite, and then—

"Would you drive down to the station for me next Saturday afternoon if I were to come out on that day?"

"I usually drive out Saturdays. Find me as soon said for you as not."

"Many thanks my charming little chevalier," said he, smiling, and then he bade her a pleasant adieu, leaving Hattie with an odd little feeling in her heart.

"Not much to tell of," she mused. "But I can tell it in such a way that the girls will think it is a great deal more than it is, and I think he will come to the point before long. But I don't care much whether he does or not. I like Fred Norwood twice better."

Poor Fred, whom she had treated so shamefully, and who had ever been so kind to her and always ready to shield her in any scrape she might get into. But here the door was burst open and the whole group of girls assembled.

"I'll wager my new gros grain silk that she never popped at Eiglone," cried Martha Mason, gleefully.

"Ah! well, you? However, I shall not tell all my private affairs, Miss."

"Of course not, but if you were engaged to him you would publish it in the daily to-morrow."

"You'll never see him again," said Belle, laughing.

"Won't I?" cried Hattie, in a rage, "he is coming down next Saturday."

"I don't believe it unless he has business," said Martha.

"Yes, dear," said Hattie, inwardly raging, but outwardly pleasant, "he has business, and it is with me."

"Well, if you have met your fate I am glad of it," said Jessie. "For now the rest of us will get a chance at Fred Norwood. He is coming back soonest, I know, for I saw it."

"If course I did. Don't Fred and I correspond?" asked Hattie, with great superiority.

"There she goes again," said Belle indignantly. "And you girls, can't get near me, so try it, if you dare."

"Hattie is pretty sure. She must have fascinated him somehow," said Jessie.

"I have created him with my eye, so, girls' he is my property, and hands off, if you please."

So saying, Hattie ran up stairs to her mother's room to remove her hat and driving gloves.

The old ladies at Mrs. Thompson's boarding house spared their eyes very wide when Hattie went out upon the street with the stranger that evening, leaving the other girls to their own devices.

"Why, what's the matter, Hattie? Is anything serious about it, at least I mean is it—"

"I don't think there will either," said Martha Mason, with unpleasant emphasis. "It does sound so silly to me; I don't believe one of them would have you any way you could fix it, Hat Linton."

So saying she threw slightest ones laced into successive laughter and ran out of the room.

Hattie laughed a little to herself. "The girls are awful mad" she thought and she resolved to make as much out of her flirtation as possible.

During the next week Mrs. Mason and Martha visited Chicago, and when they returned, they were in the possession of a little secret which they kept carefully to themselves, only they were more than usually kind to Hattie Linton.

Mr. Linton, who had been at home that week, had heard something from Belle about Hattie's flirtation with the Chicago lawyer, and when his daughter, principally for the effect it would have on the girls, came into the sitting room and said, "I want the pony and carriage to go down to the depot for my fellow, papa," he frowned savagely, and said—

"The pony is in use, Harriet."

"You can get me some other rig, then, can't you? I've promised, and I am going."

"If your fellow wishes to come here, he can get here without your help," said Mr. Linton, with deep sin.

Mrs. Mason and Martha looked at each other with a sly smile, and Hattie, furiously angry, left the room, closing the door with a violent slam behind her.

"I will leave a horse at the livery," she said, a half hour later, to the ladies, when her father had gone upstairs.

"You may take my horse and carriage if you wish to go for your lover," said Mrs. Mason, questioningly. "But I would not go after him if I was not engaged to him."

"I shall come down the main road after," said Hattie, mutiniously, in her rage.

Mrs. Mason turned to the others, after Hattie had left them, saying:

"Ladies, I do not know what to think of that girl. Albert Eiglone is a married man; my sister lives near him in Chicago. Hattie Linton cannot have much if she knows it, but it is possible he has deceived her, and she thinks him single."

"Perhaps she did not go after him," said Mrs. Thompson, aghast.

"Oh, she did," said Martha. "She has been talking about him all the week."

"There is always joking, you know," said Mrs. Thompson.

No one said anything, but behind the handkerchiefs the tongues wagged like wildfire, and poor Hattie's good name was being moulded with all the venom which lies underneath the tongues of jealous women.

Meanwhile Hattie's driving was like unto the driving of Jehu, and she arrived at the depot just as the train came in; but where was the expected lover? He had not come.

Quickly it dawned upon Hattie's mind that he had used this means to get rid of her without her suspecting it, and an awful shame mingled with her rage as she thought what those awful women would say.

As the awful truth surged through her brain, she saw Fred Norwood running toward the little basket phaeton.

"Miss Hattie, can you show? I was awfully like a ride into Chisholm; the stage is not here."

"I shall be glad of your company," she said, scarcely knowing her own voice.

Fred chatted along pleasantly without her understanding a word he said, until he remarked:

"My brother-in-law, Albert Eiglone, told me all the news from Chisholm. Did you know—"

"Your brother-in-law," gasped she.

"Yes, didn't he tell you, he married my sister Nettie?"

Hattie had been terribly excited during the last few minutes, and she drew into bears, and Fred, who dearly loved to be willful did just what he did, he sawed the whole story from her lips.

"I never can go back to that place in the world," she said at last. "The girls will laugh about it, forever."

"Why?" said Fred, gravely, "did you love him?"

"No," said Hattie, laughing, "I just did it to make the girls jealous."

"Hattie," said Fred, again in a moment, "you know I love you. Could you ever possibly believe my wife, loving me as a wife should her husband?"

"Yes, Fred, I could," said Hattie during her eyes.

"Then, darling," said he, delightedly, "just tell them we have been engaged for six months, and I'll fix the rest.

There was great talking amongst the ladies that evening, when, after tea, it had spoken to Mr. Linton Fred announced their engagement, and, on the very first opportunity, Mrs. Mason said—

"You did not know of Hattie's flirtation with Fred Norwood, a married man, a week ago, did you, Fred?"

"No!" said he, "Who did you say?"

"The lawyer from Chicago, Albert Eiglone."

"What a joke," said he, laughing in her face. "Albert Eiglone is my brother-in-law. They were selling you, Mrs. Mason."

The look upon her face was laughable to behold.

But it was a lesson to Hattie Linton; for Belle told her how nurse had lost her escape, and she never flirted nor exaggerated again.

Rather Embarrassing.

A well-known curate of a church in a southwestern section of London was about to be married to a young lady residing in the vicinity. The officiating clergyman and the bridegroom had taken up their respective positions at the altar, awaiting the bride's arrival when suddenly a lady, attired in bridal dress, and accompanied by two little girls as bridesmaids, entered the sacred edifice, walked hurriedly up the aisle, and took up her side of the altar rails, and seized his arm in an excited manner. The gentleman, though somewhat startled, did not lose his presence of mind, and, with the assistance of some ladies, endeavored to persuade the fair intruder to retire. After a scene of some confusion, the lady was removed to a seat, where she was effectually screened from any further view of the proceedings, and the ceremony was allowed to proceed without further interruption. It appears that the lady who was so desirous of taking part in the ceremony which had not been allotted to her, is a widow in good circumstances, who had conceived a violent attachment to the clergyman, a member of whose congregation she was a member. It is believed the announcement of his intended marriage with the special lady has affected her mind.—Sheffield Telegraph.

B. F. BUTLER.

How His Determination to Enter the Presidential Race is Viewed.

Its Probable Effect In the Doubtful States of the North.

[Special telegram to the Chicago Times.]

NEW YORK.

NEW YORK CITY.

The decided determination of Gen. Butler to put himself in the field for the Presidency is a topic about which politicians of all parties to-day can have much to say. Said a well-known ex-member of the Aldermanic chamber and Sachem of Tammany this afternoon: "Of course John Kelly will not say so in any many words, but you can peel under my own mind that he, as well as the majority of the Tammany voices, is extremely glad to know that they will be able to vote for Butler this autumn if they feel so inclined. There are several reasons why Butler is sure to catch a large portion of the Irish vote. He is bold, aggressive, and without an iota of sympathy with England.

Clinton Furbish, a Brooklyn Greenbacker, said: "Gen. Butler is a candidate earnest for the Presidency. He will make not doubt poll a large vote in this State and the States of Massachusetts, New Jersey, Connecticut, and Michigan. Why, I believe that the General will move into Chicago than I believed."

Thomas Dunlavy, a member of the Independent Labor party and an Irish Nationalist, said: "I think that the General will result in throwing the election into the House of Representatives, which event Cleveland would probably win."

Ex-Senator Conkling:

The disinclination in the Republican ranks is quite pronounced in this section. The Republicans are not enthusiastic about Supreme Cleveland. There are, however, many Republicans who intend to vote for Butler, they will vote for Butler rather than support Cleveland. The indications are, therefore, that Butler will draw more Blaine than Cleveland votes. He will certainly poll quite a heavy vote in this city.

REPORTER.

Opinions on the position of Butler in the campaign seem to be mainly expressions of what is hoped or feared. Republicans expect that his advent, if made at all agreeable, will draw largely from Democrats. They are looking for his support by Tammany Hall, the New York Sun, and the leading Irish Liberals. It is expressed freely that he will cut more votes from Cleveland than one from Blaine, yet it is observed that in this reckoning the Irish Liberals, who are not scarce here, are reckoned as coming from Cleveland. Democrats insist by saying that these votes are already gone to Blaine by reason of the nomination of Butler. They add that Blaine will lose 50 M. John all that he can gain in the shouting themselves hoarse in the saloon, and on the street corners for Butler.

ADVANCE.

Cleveland clubs, consisting largely of members of trades unions, have already been formed in the city, but the issue have taken no official action in regard to the campaign. Some curiosity is expressed as to the effect upon Butler's candidacy will have upon them.

Indiana.

NEW ALBANY.

In relation to the candidacy of Butler as the probable effect, Hon. John D. Ellison, the Greenback nominee for Attorney General, says: "Butler will draw votes from both parties, but it is my judgment to Indiana he will draw more from the Democrats to come from the Republicans, and his candidacy will defeat Cleveland. It is certain to lose him Indiana, New York, and New Jersey, and secure Ontario, Ohio, and California for Blaine beyond peradventure. The Democratic workingmen will vote for Butler, and he will get the solid Greenback and Anti-Monopoly vote in the part of Indiana Butler will draw largely from the Democrats. I acted with the Democrats before nothing with the Greenback party.

Massachusetts.

BOSTON.

The Bitter opinion of Butler's candidacy, so widely held in Massachusetts, is that it will hurt Cleveland. There are, however, many who believe the Democratic party will be benefited by the enthusiasm for Butler. The Butler will draw a good vote all through the section, and it is feared will cut into Cleveland's votes seriously. The Democrats are organizing very thoroughly and will make a hot fight. The Blaine men declare their confidence in carrying Cheaning County, but a strong effort will be made to keep it in the Democratic ranks. St. John will draw a good vote from Republicans and may offset Butler's inroad on the Democracy.

LOWELL.

Ben Butler's nomination for the presidency of the National Greenback Labor party was received here with fairly enthusiasm by Greenbackers and workingmen. In the Second Ward there are Butler clubs with 200 members. The total vote of the ward is 750. Butler clubs in other wards do not show so large membership, but have votes to be heavy. In the Holly Water Works, where about one-half of the employes are Democrats, only ten will vote for Cleveland. The remainder will go to Butler. In Ward Four the vote of the town is 200. A Butler club of thirty members was organized at the first meeting. In Bedford the vote of the town is 575. There is a Butler club with members in one polling district. Reports from other towns show an unexpected appearance for Butler. Lawrence, J. McPerlin, State Committeeman of the National Greenback party, said: "Butler in 1877, is much surprised at the sudden change of feeling, and from the best reports received, claims that if the Butler boom continues he will carry Massachusetts by a vote of the votes cast in Nugent County.

THOS.

Butler's decision to run created quite an excitement here. The shirt labor open has come out squarely for Butler. There are over 1,000 voters here out of a total poll of 11,000, who are enrolled among the several labor unions. Nearly all of these votes have gone for the Democratic candidates heretofore, but the feeling against Cleveland is so strong that fully 2000 of these are expected to be cast for the Labor candidate. Many of the Labor leaders here, until to-day, said they would refrain from voting altogether. Most of them are now ten. Butler's declaration that he will stand by the Greenback and Anti-Monopoly nominations is looked upon by politicians about town as having lost its importance from long delay, and neither party seems to derive any particular satisfaction from the prospect of his drawing off part of the Irish and labor vote. The Republicans contend that he can not poll a very large Irish vote, and that even if he does he will be drawn from the regular Democratic rank and file. The Democrats say, however, that he will draw off the dynamite Irish, who would have gone to Blaine but Butler not run, and that the Greenback vote will be disposed with the hope of throwing the election into the House, in which event Cleveland would probably win.

SPRINGFIELD.

The disinclination in the Republican ranks is quite pronounced in this section. The Republicans are not enthusiastic about supporting Cleveland. There are, however, many Republicans who intend to vote for Butler, they will vote for Butler rather than support Cleveland. The indications are, therefore, that Butler will draw more Blaine than Cleveland votes. He will certainly poll quite a heavy vote in this city.

REPORTER.

Opinions on the position of Butler in the campaign seem to be mainly expressions of what is hoped or feared. Republicans expect that his advent, if made at all agreeable, will draw largely from Democrats. They are looking for his support by Tammany Hall, the New York Sun, and the leading Irish Liberals. It is expressed freely that he will cut more votes from Cleveland than one from Blaine, yet it is observed that in this reckoning the Irish Liberals, who are not scarce here, are reckoned as coming from Cleveland. Democrats insist by saying that these votes are already gone to Blaine by reason of the nomination of Butler. They add that Blaine will lose 50 M. John all that he can gain in the

ENVELOPES BY THE MILLION.

Interesting Facts Connected with Their Manufacture—Ten Millions a Day Made.

Millions of envelopes were piled up in all kinds of packages when a reporter entered the establishment of a leading downtown manufactory. Assenting to the second story, under the guidance of the proprietor, models of pretty girls were found seated at curiously constructed machines. Files of paper, cut into the requisite size, were passed through the neat-looking instruments, and came forth folded, gummed, and ready for use, at the rate of eighty per minute. After witnessing the remarkable performance of these machines, the reporter was entertained by the following remarks by the enthusiastic envelope man:

"Until the invention of the machine which you saw before you, the manufacture of envelopes was by no means perfect. Improvements have been going on constantly ever since the Japanese first used envelopes as implements for perfumes, etc. The Leaker, by which name the most perfect machine ever invented is known, is used in many countries, and will probably continue the most perfect piece of mechanism for the manufacture of envelopes ever invented. The contractors for the post-office stamped envelopes also use this machine, with an attachment which prints and stamps the envelope at the same time at the rate of about 2,000 an hour. Following the speaker through the big warehouse, the writer was shown envelopes of every description. "Here you have," said the Professor, "an envelope known as commercial pattern, made of Manila rope, engine sized, machine and loft dried. The same is made of linen, lead, and other coarse papers. Here is a list known in the trade as legal, portfolio, document, safety, embossed, opaque, silvered, cold edge, square, oblong. Here you have various styles of wedding envelopes, suitable for the poor clerk or laboring man with a salary of $3 a week, up to the Fifth avenue millionaire whose income is computed by the millions. Look at these morning envelopes; notice the width of the black border, running all the way from one-sixteenth of an inch up to two inches. The former are used as tributes to distant or poor relatives. Those with the widest black border are in great demand for those who mourn the loss of a rich uncle or grandfather. Those which have been well provided for in last wills and testaments use these largely. Here you see an assortment of envelopes of all sizes, such as are used by druggists; and yet we have in this house an experimentalist who is known as a chemist, who, when he dies, will be missed. But it is generally admitted that Butler's plans are too deep for the understanding of ordinary people. The Post-office envelopes the general feeling is that they are a great improvement. Asked by the Judge before whom he was brought to answer to a criminal charge, he was guilty or not guilty, replied: "If its all the same to yer Honor, I refer to the evidence in the case, yer Honor, yer question." Secretary McPherson, of the Republican Committee, when asked what he thought of Butler's letter, said: "I think that the Democrats just what he did with us when he was a Republican. He's a regular bull in a china shop. He has done as everybody expected when he was so ignominiously snubbed at Chicago. He'll run now as a Labor-Greenback. They now have two candidates in the field. Butler will carry a large Democratic vote. He will take some Republican votes which would have gone to Blaine, but these are few, and we are not afraid of him. We have got to be very sunshine he will get that would not have voted for Blaine."

Tammany.

GETTING MORE AMIABLE.

Every night since the New York Herald reminded the Tammany men more amiable towards the Democratic ticket. The presence in the East of Gov. Hendricks, who enjoys the warm admiration of Mr. Kelly and his followers, has done much to soften the asperities which were left by the Chicago convention, and no candid politician of either party now pretends to doubt that Tammany will be loyally for Tilden and Hendricks, and that the substantial evidences of the union of the factions will not be long delayed.

John Kelly.

In an interview at Saratoga, the other day, John Kelly is reported to have said: "I think Butler will do no actual injury to the situation. With three candidates in the field the canvass will be very much complicated."

"What will be the result?"

"It is too early to make predictions."

"You have Butler well?"

"Very well. He is very popular with the working classes and will polls a large vote. Wait till his letter is published, by that time the news will be received and it will be safer to make predictions."

Gambling Everywhere.

A traveler to Long Branch describes a thing characteristic of the speculative sort of business men who so largely make up the season's multitude at the famous seaside resort. A dozen men, lacking room in the smoking car of the crowded train, went to enjoy their cigars in the baggage car. Here was a baby carriage lying on its side, the bedding on one wheel supporting, and horizontal. Not a minute had elapsed before a broker wrapped a bit of paper around a spoke. "Now, gentlemen," he said, "stand around the wheel of fortune while I whirl it thus," and he gave the wheel a turn. "It costs you 25 cents apiece, and the man in front of whom the marked spoke stops takes the pot. Make your game while the wheel is revolving." During the rile of an hour and a half, the impromptu game did not of an instant lag.—New York Sun.

Around the County.

Burgess.

Indian camp meeting in Hayes commences Aug. 26.

Fishing commences again at Burgess Aug. 30.

There is one family in Hayes that have picked $40 worth of red raspberries this season.

Harvesting with the exceptions of some pieces of late spring wheat and late oats, is about over.

The Hamlin boys will soon start out with their threshing machine.

J. B. Lewis has parted from his wife and applied for divorce.

J. B. Lewis & Co., have dissolved partnership. J. B. assumes the liabilities.

John Brown has sunk his well 58 feet and is going to let it rest at that; no water.

The inhabitants of Hayes have made a corner on pigs, each family having from 10 to 15.

Peter Kane sold a two year old heifer for 45 dollars one day last week.

It will soon be hop picking time, and hop vines are well filled.

The rain is just in time to make it good plowing.

A. W. Chase has the best piece of spring wheat on the state road between Burgess and Carpenter.

South Arm.

Hot, hotter, hottest, but through the blessing of a cool lake breeze we still survive.

Mrs. H. B. Vance and son, of Echo, visited friends in East Jordan and South Arm, last week.

Miss Mary McMillan is spending a few days in Ironton with her sister, Mrs. Cliff Papineau.

P. L. Lanway and little Annie Roe were on the sick list last week, but are recovering.

Mrs. S. G. Isaman is able to be out again after six weeks illness.

Rev. Mr. Parks, the new presbyterian minister, is stopping at the Eagle hotel.

Mrs. Barker and daughter are stopping with Mrs. B's brother, Mr. Covey.

Mrs. McMillan, of Echo was visiting her grand daughter of the house of Papineau recently. She was accompanied home by her daughter Mrs. Thomas Nowland, of Charlevoix.

Mrs. J. A. Kent visited friends in Bay Springs and Boyne, last week.

Harvest apples have made their appearance here.

The Gospel temperance meeting held at the church Sunday afternoon was quite well attended, and very interesting. Although Mrs. Carse says she is not a speaker we have heard a number say it was the best temperance meeting of the season. We expect more meetings will follow if there is interest enough manifested on the part of the ladies to warrant it. Mothers, you who have boys to save, come out and help us.

The World's W. C. T. U.

Finally, dear sisters, may I submit to your plan which is the outgrowth of my special studies in this most eventful year. On the Pacific coast I felt the pulsation of the newest America—which includes that true "garden of the gods,"—California, with its semi-tropic climate, and invites not only Europe but Asia to a seat in its banqueting hall. I looked into the mystic face of the orient, and rejoiced in the breezy breath of Japan, the France, even as Gilon in the England of the east Pacific coast. I learned the magic transformations in the civilization of Japan, its readiness to take up western customs and the consequent danger lest our vices be come domesticated there. I visited the opium dens of San Francisco and was appalled by the degradation resulting from a poison habit which curses the victim more, but his home less, than does the frenzy of the alcohol dream. Meanwhile, missionaries to the orient assured me that "same the crusade" a great temperance work is going on in the cities of India, China, and Japan, among the English speaking population, and letters from our Connecticut president, Mrs. Trowbrell, now traveling on the continent of Europe, assured me that leading pastors of Paris are anxious to have a W. C. T. U. organized in that metropolis of the whole world. I knew our British cousins across the line and across the sea would heartily co-operate in the movement and so resolved to urge my sisters to signalize the epoch we rejoice in by the formation of an international W. C. T. U. that shall belt the globe and join the east and west in an organized attack upon the poison habits of both hemispheres. We can do no more at this convention than to authorize the initial steps of such a government. For a year or two the work must be wholly carried on by correspondence and throug the press. Few have as yet the international spirit. I found more of this class on the other coast than here. These friends, better informed than we, and not at present so enlisted in the temperance work, will largely aid in this new and most catholic endeavor. I suggest little more to-day than that the prestige of our great society be the fulcrum for a preliminary lift in this splendid enterprise.

Beloved, we have given hostages, not to fortune, but to humanity. We are building better than we know. We stand not only for the cause of temperance, but for the divinest womanhood that shall ere long bring in the era of "sweeter manners, purer laws." We stand for the mighty forces which level up not down, and which shall draw manhood up to woman's standard of purity in the personal conduct of life. We are the prophets of a time when the present fashionable frivolities of women and money worship of men shall find themselves confronted by God's high or law of a complete humanity resulting from:

"Two heals in counsel, two beside the hearth;
Two in the public business of the world,
Two in the liberal offers of life;
Two diamonds dropped
To sound the abyss of science and the swords of
The mind."

For the world begins to see that

"No lasting links to bind two souls are wrought,
Where passion takes root per cent from thought.

In all this wondrous battle let our motto be "womanliness first; afterward what you will." Let us follow with unchanged devotion the gleaming cross of Him who is "holiest among the mighty and mightiest among the holy," even that loving Christ whose gospel raises women up, and with her lifts toward heaven the world! "The coward despairs—do ye brave?" The battle is not yours, but God's.—Frances E. Willard in annual Address N. W. C. T. U. Convention, Detroit, Mich., Oct. 21, 1883.

F. P. Cole is in Ontario, Wis.

☞ A full line of tobaccos at E. M. Clark's.

Annual school meeting next Monday evening.

The M. E. Sunday school have a picnic at Boyne to-day.

Miss Anna Bell closed her school on the "peninsula" last Friday.

☞ Be sure and go to E. M. Clark's for crockery and glassware, at cost.

The Queen of the Lakes gave an excursion to East Jordan yesterday.

The steamer Mayflower cleared from this port for Detroit Sunday morning.

All outward bound boats are loaded with scatters returning to their homes.

The Friant gave an excursion to Boyne yesterday, which was well patronized.

The John Otis will soon engage in the ore carrying trade from St. Ignace to Ironton.

The new wheel for the Gazelle arrived Tuesday, and she resumes her route to-day.

It is said that H. Bacon, of Boyne, is the "boss flipper" when it comes to picnic parentage.

☞ Alvey Coulter has put up 1,000 feet of eave trough this season, for L. D. Bartholomew.

☞ E. M. Clark, sells 11 lb loaf sugar for $1, 14 lb C sugar for $1, and 12 lb granulated for $1.

☞ If you want a good rifle, and would like to save 25 per cent, buy it at L. D. Bartholomew's.

Al. Washburn is home again from his cruise around the inland lakes between here and Traverse City.

The Clara Belle is on her old route between East Jordan and Harbor Springs. Time table next week.

The woman's foreign missionary society meet with Mrs. J. T. Iddings next Tuesday, Sept. 2, at 3 o'clock.

Henry Wagner, of Norwood, lost a boy last Sunday, about 14 months old, from cholera infantum; buried Tuesday.

Ben. Weaver has brought his mother here to live, and the family is settled in H. S. Harris's house, on Main street.

Mrs. I. D. Porter favored the printer's family last Saturday with a fine mess of green corn and ripe apples.

There will be services at the opera house next Sunday morning and evening. Rev. Mr. Streimer, of Hartford, Ohio, will preach in the evening.

☞ Every reader of this paper is requested to send us a list of campaign subscribers, at 25 cents each, (cash with list.) Every man in the county should take a copy.

Russell's dramatic combination played "The Trapper's Daughter," to a fair audience at the opera house Monday evening, giving excellent satisfaction. At another time they would fill the house.

The last quarterly service of this conference year will be held at the M. E. church. Rev. C. L. Barnhart, presiding elder of the Ionia district, will preach and conduct the services. All are invited who can come.

John Bell now occupies both rooms of his block with his flour and feed business, and requires the assistance of D. C. Bacon to attend to customers. He also does a little in the wholesale line with towns up the lakes.

The Bank of Charlevoix changes its firm name to Brown & Co., Mr. P. K. Brown becoming a partner, and adding capital to the bank. Mr. Lewis Reynolds returns with his family to his old home in Grattot county.

Melvin Houghtelin, who went to Texas last spring from this place, has returned and is well enough satisfied with northern Michigan. His family will soon be here and he will again locate in Charlevoix county. They will be welcome.—Statesman.

A. D. Bradbeer, the photographer, now at Boyne, announces that he will be in Charlevoix this week. Samples of his work show considerable merit, and we understand he has already a number of orders from our citizens. He will have samples on exhibition at the postoffice.

Mr. Lewis Reynolds has sold his interest in the Bank of Charlevoix, and moved back to his home in Maple Rapids. His household goods were shipped on the propeller Saginaw Valley on Sunday, and the family went on Monday. Mr. Reynolds will be missed from the bank and from our streets. Always cheerful himself, he had a good word for every one he met, and his friends include all who knew him. Sorry to see him go.

Fox & Miller claim to have the largest and best selected stock of boots and shoes in this county. With their long experience, excellent location, and other advantages, these gentlemen will no doubt make the shoe business boom this fall.

George Pudsfoot, father of Rev. W. G. Pudsfoot, missionary for northern Michigan of the Congregational church, was missed from the steamer Grand Rapids last Monday and has not since been seen. It is supposed that he slipped between the boat and dock and was drowned, but diligent search has failed to recover the body.

☞ Col. Frederick E. Goodrich's admirable "life" of Grover Cleveland is now ready; it is handsomely bound and printed, and contains upwards of 500 pages; it is illustrated by first-class artists; it is from the press of Messrs. H. Hallett & Co., of Portland, Maine. As a rapid biographer, Col. Goodrich doubtless stands without a rival in America, and the volume has the impress of the broadest information and most careful attention on every page. This is the biography that received the inestimable benefit of the active co-operation and assistance of Mr. Cleveland, his relatives and friends; this is the volume that is recommended by the friends and private secretary of the distinguished candidate; it is a true picture, drawn by a master hand, of the life of the statesman from the humble cradle to the present day, and presents a striking contrast to the score of so-called "lives" which are to a large extent filled with irrelevant matter made up from the newspapers of the day; those who are wise will subscribe only for the authentic Portland edition—the largest, cheapest, hand omest and best. The steel plate portraits of Cleveland and Hendricks were engraved for the volume and are a standing rebuke to the caricatures which appear in the so-called "lives" with big pretentions.

We understand that this authentic, standard edition, is outselling all others, more than ten to one, and that its agents are meeting with the most phenomenal success. A few more agents are wanted by the publishers; the most liberal terms are offered. It is a splendid chance for beginners, as with this grand book no one can fail to do a great business. The volume also contains a biography of Thomas A. Hendricks.

Railroad Matters.

Mr. Ashley, of the Toledo & Ann Arbor railroad, states that he will be able to make a good report of the Bellaire route to Charlevoix. It is stated that the road will be completed either to Charlevoix or Frankfort within two years.

H. B. Chapman visited Vanderbilt last week for the purpose of talking over the feasibility of extending the Bay Springs and Boyne Falls narrow gauge railroad to that place. A meeting of citizens was held, committees appointed to look over the ground and to solicit subscriptions, and a citizens' meeting called for Sept. 7th to devise plans for carrying out the work. These men evidently mean business.

A Picnic Party.

The families of H. Bacon and De Sauniers, of Boyne, are camping at Bear lake, and last Sunday they invited many of their friends in town to dine with them. The bill of fare included meat, fish, potatoes, baked beans, pancakes, tea, etc., all prepared by the campfire, served on tin plates, and apparently struck the bright spot in the appetites of the guests. One of the curiosities was to watch H. Bacon, "flip" his pancakes. In this department of cooking he is a success. The party will remain in camp this week.

M. E. Church.

M. E. church, Pastor and Congregation, most cordially invite all strangers, and resorters, to participate in the services held each Sabbath, morning and evening. All who are not otherwise engaged, will be welcomed with the assurance that a pleasant time, will be had. The Sabbath school, is quite a factor, in the enjoyableness of each Sabbath service. J. T. IDDINGS, Pastor.

Married.

The following marriages are reported from the M. E. parsonage by Rev. J. T. Iddings:

Ira T. Sayer and Julia Niles.

Stephen Bashaw and Myra Raymond.

Christian Johnson and Mary Johnson.

New Clothing.

Geo. W. Miller has just made large additions to his stock of clothing, hats, caps, etc., and it will pay those wanting goods to go and see him before buying.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

NEW YORK telegrams: Third Officer Kelly, of the steamer Ber, says as a result of eating the flesh of Lieut. Kislingbury and Private Henry were time, as the survivors, when brought on board, were all but delirious, and admitted that they had to cut the dead bodies to preserve their own lives. The crew of the Bear said that all the survivors said they had to cut the dead dead, as all their food, except a little leather or sealskin, had given out. All the men on board the Bear knew that the bodies had been eaten, but were told not to speak about it when they got into port.

ED GEORGE and Frank Gebhart fought twenty-seven rounds with bare knuckles for $700 at Lawrenceville, Pa. Gebhart won, and his opponent was so weak that he was unable to leave his room. The Rev. Dr. John Brown, the oldest Presbyterian Episcopal minister in New York State, passed away at Newburg, aged 93.

THE Austrian consul at Pittsburgh hoisted the flag of his country over his office, in honor of the Emperor's birthday. The Chief of Police ordered it lowered, and the consul refused, on the ground that the streets given him the right claimed. J. J. Woodward, United States attorney, one of the physicians who attended President Garfield in his last illness, has just died near Philadelphia.

AT New York, the other day, William H. Bingham obtained an order for the arrest of Ferdinand Ward on the charge of having stolen $48,000 from him. Bingham, an Elmira professor, has given bond that Ward had contracts from the United States Government which were very profitable. The order was served on Ward in the Leffler Street Jail, where he is sojourning at present. Bail has been fixed at $48,000. An official report shows a deficiency of $185,571 in the accounts of the Wall Street Bank in New York. Suit has been brought to forfeit the franchise, and Judge Barrett appointed the clerk of the city receiver of its property. The river panel to Robert Bonner, W. H. Vanderbilt for Mahl S. Sue, $40,000. She will be retired from the turf.

PHILADELPHIA reports the failures of Warner & Merritt, fruit importers, with liabilities of $500,000; E. L. Mintzer, Jr., enamel goods; W. H. Echelman & Co., commission merchants; and Graham, Lesler & Co., white goods.

THE WEST.

OWING to the diminished rainfall of this season the water in the Mississippi River is exceptionally low, and the flour-mills and saw-mills run, by water-power have suffered—the saw-mills most, because owing to the lack of water the logs cannot be floated from the booms to the mills. The entire business portion of Anoka, Minn., was destroyed by flames. Washburn & Co., shoe, lost $200,000. Seventy buildings were burned, and the total loss is placed at $1,500,000. The Cheyennes are reported to be burning the grass in the Powder River Valley in Montana, and the settlers are somewhat alarmed. The Quincy Rose Bull Club has disbanded.

THE Northwestern Base-Ball League virtually disbanded at Milwaukee, and a new organization, composed of the St. Paul, Minneapolis, Winona, and Milwaukee clubs, was formed. A new schedule was then arranged. The township authorities at Clinton, Ill., killed fourteen head of infected cattle, for which $468 was paid to the owners.

MRS. STUDEY, wife of William F. Stoey, proprietor of the Chicago Times, has filed a petition in the Probate Court of Chicago, to be made conservator of the estate of her husband, who is assigned to be insane, on that some person selected by her shall be appointed. Another petition offered on the part of the heirs and creditors has also been filed. At Tobias, Neb., Wiley Parrs, who had been separated from his wife, went to her boarding place, called her out, and deliberately shot her through the head. He then shot himself in the temple, dying instantly. H. Ten Eyck, a farmer living near Broadhead Green County, Wis., having fatally stabbed his wife, committed suicide by hanging. Eight prisoners escaped from the jail at St. Joseph, Mo. They made their exit through a sewer pipe.

AT the request of his relatives, the remains of Private William Whistler were exhumed at Delphi, Ind., in the presence of about forty persons, who by agreement had quietly assembled in the little country churchyard. Four dockets rendered the coffin opened, and on removing the lid a slight alcoholic odor escaped, but this was all. The casket was filled with rubbish, which being removed the corpse was found wrapped in needle sheeting and woolen blankets. These were hastily stripped off and the remains exposed to view. The flesh had been stripped from the legs, arms, back, and sides to the very bones, and seemingly with sharp instruments. All the flesh was cut away except what little remained on the face, hands, feet, and chest. The vital organs were all present, and showed a slight amount of fecal matter, which contained hair and fibrous substances. Heavy rains along the line of the Northern Pacific in Dakota have certainly damaged the wheat crop. Prem Southern Illinois and Southern Indiana complaints come of the damaging effects of a long-continued drought. A. D. Wyman, president of Minneapolis for robbing the American Express Company at St. Joseph, Mo., in September last, of $10,500. Flames swept away a block of business structures at Roseburg, Oregon, valued at $100,000, and forty-two buildings at Pomeroy, Ohio, worth $50,000.

THE Illinois Central Railroad have just issued a neat little pamphlet entitled the "World's Exposition Messenger," giving a synopsis of the great Centennial Exposition that opens at New Orleans on the first of December. The pamphlet contains much valuable information, and a large, correct map of the Crescent City. A copy can be obtained Free by addressing Thomas Gilmin, General Northern Passenger Agent, 121 Randolph street, Chicago.

REPORTS from various points in Missouri indicate the oats crop will be slightly above the average, wheat will yield about twenty bushels to the acre, corn is in excellent condition, and promises to be large, potatoes are small, and the hay crop light. The fruit crop is not up to the average. The Brookfield Gazette asserts positively that contagious pleuro-pneumonia has made its appearance among five herds of dairy cattle in Illinois, and gives fame and that the infection is much more extensive. The Commissioners appointed from Cass County, and kept inside its appearance in Cass, Platteland, and Shelby. The Northwestern Lumbermen's Association, representing $500,000,000 capital, held a meeting in Chicago, and the long debate resulted that it would not be wise to close the mills for Nov. 1. Again Dyer has informed the Indian Bureau that the Chiennes and Arapahoes alone boys who have returned from the school at Carlisle, Penn., and wishing their people to be educated.

THE SOUTH.

A FLANGE on the forward trucks of a locomotive, pulling an express passenger train, broke between Zion and Green, Ky., and the engine slide down a 10-foot embankment, dragging with it the postal, baggage, and two passenger cars, and derailing the sleeper, tender, and engine. The engineer and fireman were crushed to death in the debris of the engine and seriously hurt, but no other persons were seriously injured. The wreck was discovered by the conductor of the train, and the alarm was given by the unhurt passengers.

A NEW line is being constructed by the New York, Philadelphia and Norfolk Railroad, in Accomac County, Va. Considerable opposition has recently been manifested by the farmers in the vicinity, who think they have not received proper compensation from the railroad corporation. This was intensified when a conspicuous train passed through a herd of cattle standing on the track, killing many of them. The farmers in the vicinity gathered and tore up the track at another point. When the construction train approached they placed the cattle on the rails. The engineer and fireman were badly injured. They claimed that the property of their employer, and the railroad men determined, [illegible] Thursday last, to have the conviction of the rioters. Mr. Vanderbilt for Mahl S. Sue, $40,000. ADDITIONAL NEWS.

JACOB A. ELA, Auditor of the Treasury for the Postoffice Department, died at Washington, of congestion. He was formerly a member of Congress from New Hampshire.

TWO OF the smaller criminals connected with the Dublin Castle scandals have been convicted. They are Richard Ryan, of Leighlinbridge, and Considine, a blind Irish schoolmaster. Dr. Ferguson, of the Coldstream Guards, was acquitted.

BEFORE the American Bar Association, in session at Saratoga, N. Y., Judge John F. Dillon, of New York, delivered the annual address. His subject was the relation of the judiciary to the rights of the statutes, accompanied with some appropriate comments on the future conditions.

The most notable wedding of the season took place at Newport, R. I., where Bishop Potter united Theron R. Suett, of New York, and Miss Emily M., daughter of Gen. Meredith Reed. Congratulations were received from the King and Queen of Greece, the Crown Prince of Germany, Chief Justice Waite, and President Arthur.

The property of the Sprague Manufacturing Company at Augusta, Me., was sold the other day for $290,000. The same property cost $2,000,000 when fifteen years ago.

At a meeting of petroleum producers at Titusville, Pa., it was resolved that no oil shipped for the year. As $8 per cent. of the wells and tankers were carried by the men who took this action, production will be greatly reduced.

Five men were killed in the Tower of Pittsburg in a house at Shanesville, Pa.

The Grand Jury in the case of the Fifth Government of the Confederate service at Macon, Mr. J. C. Young, of the Fifty-first New York Regiment, which opened the regimental flag of the Confederate, resented it, and the Texas and Arkansas Rangers surrounded the house and demanded the surrender of the flag. Government launch Lieut. Commander Lamberton, and Paymaster N. Goodwin was blown overboard and drowned, and the engineer pilot, and the others were seriously scalded.

REPORTS from the British provinces indicate that the hay crop just harvested will be 30 per cent. less than last year. The drought in Northern and Central New England is extending South and West. The make of butter and cheese in Vermont and the great dairy section of N. Y. and New York will be much curtailed.

Mr. Patrick Ford, the recently elected President of the Irish National League of America, has appointed the following as the Executive Committee of his organization: M. V. Brennan of Texas, M. Boland of Colorado, Timothy Mooney of Louisiana, Thomas Flatley of Massachusetts, M. D. Holmes of Kansas, J. J. O. Donnell of Michigan, and D. J. Carroll of Rhode Island.

A TYPHOON (HIT) Sunday evening picnic excursion of thirteen coaches, carrying 1,000 people, was run into by a C. L. and N. W. train at the crossing of Lake and James Penn was killed; and Father O'Kelly, of St. Michael's Church of Streator, was probably fatally wounded. Many others were seriously hurt. A fire at Stoughton, Wis., destroyed the principal stores in the village.

CAPT. E. P. ALLEN has been nominated for Congress by the Republicans of the Second Michigan District. Charles Stuart, of Houston, has been nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Fourth District of Texas.

THE KANSAS Democrats met in State convention at Topeka on the 21st of August. A convention of Republican Anti-Prohibitionists assembled at the same time and place. The result was a complete fusion of the two forces and the nomination of George W. Glick for re-election as Governor. C. K. Holliday, a Republican, was named for Lieutenant Governor. In the number of the ticket is to be Judge Horton, Secretary of State, Eugene Hagan, Auditor, Hugh V. Dawson, Treasurer, W. A. Hunter, Superintendent of Public Instruction, M. J. Kaye, Attorney General, G. P. Wood, Clerk of Judges, W. D. Ewart, Clerk of Supreme Court, T. A. Hurd, The platforms contained little that was not similar in tone and tone of Glick, and it came out squarely for the prohibitory law, and for the nomination of the prohibitory amendment.

CLEVELAND AND HENDRICKS.

Their Letters Accepting the Nominations for President and Vice President.

CLEVELAND.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your communication dated July 25, 1884, informing me of my nomination by the action of the Democratic National Convention, and I accept the honor conferred. I shall at a more mature time, if necessary, fully define my views upon the matters of public interest. Meanwhile, I cannot but feel that the platform adopted by the Chicago Convention is a declaration of principles upon which the Democrats of this country fully agree, and I, for one, am willing to stand upon it.

I have carefully considered the platform adopted by the convention, and I cordially assent to the principles and purposes therein set forth. The principle upon which the party appeals to the people for support at the present time is one which, if carried into practice, would be transcendent that for which it is worth while to live and for which it is worth while to die. Long experience in the affairs of government has taught us that the best and most beneficent purpose of government, and those should be more watchful of the rights of the people than of the interests of those who are intrusted for a time with the duties of government, and those should be more watchful of the rights of the people than of the interests of those who are intrusted for a time with the duties of government, and I feel that the Democratic party will be most consistent in the effort to lessen the burdens of taxation, to reform the abuses and economize the expenditures of government, and to do justice to the people from whom the money is taken and to whom it belongs, and I believe that the public temper is such that the Democratic party can be safely entrusted with the duties of government, and that the people are willing to commit the keeping of their interests to a party which has shown itself worthy of their confidence in the past, and which, if entrusted with the duties of government, will be found to be the party of reform, and to be the party which, in the discharge of its duties, will most effectually promote the welfare of all the people.

I believe that the public temper is such that the voters of the land are willing to support the party which gives the best promise of administering the government in the interest of the people, and which, in the most effective manner, will secure to them the benefits of a government which, in its purpose and its operation, is the most economical and beneficent in the management of their affairs, and which, in the discharge of its duties, will most effectually promote the welfare of all the people.

Dated at Muskegon, Aug. 6, 1884.

F. W. COOK,
Chairman committee, Muskegon.

For Auditor General.

Some years ago we worked in the office of the Lansing Journal, then owned and managed by Col. George P. Sanford, our present candidate for auditor general. We know Mr. Sanford to be a shrewd economist and careful manager in business, and we have no doubt he will carry the same principles with him in the service of the state. Every item of unnecessary expense will be cut off, and employes will be limited to the actual necessities of the department.

As a candidate he is entitled to the support of every voter opposed to the republican party. His acknowledged ability to fill the position, and his rare powers as a political organizer, makes his candidacy exceptionally strong. We believe he will be elected by a handsome majority.

Public Office a Public Trust."

The Petoskey Record copies from the National Tribune, without comment, however, an article charging that Grover Cleveland, "while mayor of Buffalo vetoed an appropriation of $300 passed by the common council for the proper observance of decoration day."

The Record neglects to say why it was vetoed. In his message to the council, mayor Cleveland said; "I deem the object of this appropriation almost worthy one. The efforts of our veteran soldiers to keep alive the memory of their fallen comrades certainly deserves the aid and encouragement of their fellow citizens. We should all, I think, feel it a duty and a privilege to contribute to the funds necessary to carry out such a purpose. And I should be much disappointed if an appeal to our citizens for voluntary subscriptions for this patriotic object should be in vain. But the money so contributed should be a free gift of the citizens and taxpayers, and should not be extorted from them by taxation. This is so because the purpose for which this money is asked does not involve their protection or interest as members of the community, and it may or may not be approved by them." In support of his message, Mayor Cleveland headed a subscription for the purpose with a liberal sum, and, with a hearty co-operation of citizens approving his action, the desired fund was raised promptly without resort to public moneys. This action elicited universal approval. The Buffalo Express, a leading republican paper, said: "A whole volume of sound sense and just principles of municipal government will be found condensed in a brief veto sent to the council by Mayor Cleveland. * * * The city government is a business establishment, and must be conducted on business principles. All these golden rules are laid down in disapproving a vote of $500 for decoration day,—a small sum for a worthy object; but as the mayor shows, it is not the amount of the appropriation, nor the merit of it, but the principal involved, which must be considered. Private bounty ought to be equal to such a call, and then, to prove that he thinks so, Mr. Cleveland privately contributes one tenth of the whole sum needed, thus supplementing excellent principle by liberal example."

The Tribune article further says: "As governor of New York he vetoed a bill passed at the legislature which made it a misdemeanor for any person to wear a G. A. R. badge who was not an honorably discharged soldier. The petition for the bill had been signed by all the G. A. R. posts of the state." The bill referred to was so full of errors as to become at once inoperative as a law, and it reached the governor too late to return for corrections. He was thus compelled to let it die without his signature, although he believed the provisions praiseworthy if they could have been carried out as intended.

When the "grand army" boys come to know the facts concerning Gov. Cleveland, and his courage to veto such jobs as these votes, they will repudiate the party which resorts to falsehood and slander to defeat him.

Notes and News.

We commend Cleveland's letter for its compactness and clearness.—Saginaw Times.

Gov. Cleveland clearly defines his position in a brief and plain manner. —Port Huron Telegraph.

Cigar makers union No. 142, of Lockport, N. Y., have issued a circular endorsing Cleveland and Hendricks, and advising all labor unions to do likewise.

Mr. C. C. Carrier, brother of the editor of the Frankfort Express, has purchased an interest in that paper, adding his experience to the past excellent management.

Gov. Cleveland signed five and vetoed but one of the six bills urged by the New York State Trades Assembly, and that body of workingmen will give him their support.

We have now in this state two prohibition parties, the union and the republican. The first is genuine, with backbone and well defined principles. The second is a sort of second fiddle affair, angling for votes with a hook baited with broken promises.—Jackson Patriot.

More than a dozen good republicans have said to us since last week that we have the winning state ticket, and not a few have signified their intention of quietly supporting that ticket. We would like to give their names if it would not subject them to an unmerciful party lashing from their former political friends.

The new Post—oh, so new!—frankly tells the prohibitionists that the submission pledge of the republican convention does not amount to anything—as if any of them were gullible enough to suppose it did. "The state convention," it tells them, "cannot bind the local constituencies on the submission question," and "it is possible to have a republican majority without submission majority." Verry true, Sammy. But wherefore, then, the submission plank? Was it a little scheme of Alger's to catch the prohibition vote in the convention, and does his conscience smite him and make him tell the voters through his paper that there is nothing in it? Or does he hope to catch the liquor dealers' vote by telling them that the plank is a barren ideality?—Free Press.

Number 2 of the Wexford County Citizen is just at hand. Typographically, it is a clean six column quarto well filled with local news matter. There are indications, also, of a newspaper war with the older journals, which promise richness. It is evidently the organ of the independents of that county, who have nominated a county ticket.

A peculiar surprise developed in Syracuse Tuesday when over 100 republicans bolted and declared for Cleveland. It was learned that the bolt was caused by the republican county committee circulating the Buffalo newspaper containing the Cleveland scandal as a campaign document. Part of the bolters have hitherto been very active in the republican interests.—E. R. Times.

To those who expected of Gov. Cleveland an elaborate presentation of his views on all public questions his letter will be a disappointment but to the greater number who expected a simple, straightforward and concise statement of a fellow citizen placed before the public in the position of a candidate for the exalted position of president of the United States, his letter will fill the bill.—Saginaw Courier.

The re-nomination of Gov. Begole was a deserved compliment to one of the most honest, patriotic and faithful of the chief executives that have presided over the affairs of the state. His plain, democratic manners, unquestioned integrity and splendid administrative judgment, have endeared him to the hearts of the people, and they will give him an overwhelming majority next November. Mathew H. Maynard, the nominee for lieutenant governor, is one of the best known and popular citizens of Marquette. He is a gentleman of acknowledged high character and ability, and his name will greatly strengthen the ticket in the upper peninsula. For secretary of state, William Shakespeare, of Kalamazoo, was nominated. He is the present quartermaster general of the state, and the splendid record he has made in that office, together with his deserved popularity among the old soldiers of the state, will make him a most formidable candidate. James Blair, an old, respected and influential citizen of Grand Rapids, was nominated for state treasurer. Under his administration the finances of the state will be honestly and ably managed.—Lansing Journal.

There is a sharp contrast between general Butler's treatment of the labor question and that recorded it by Mr. Blaine. Indeed, that portion of the letter of the former seems to have been penned with especial reference to the utterances of the latter. Mr. Blaine spoke of the rich rewards which labor received in this country, and intimated that any frugal man could readily, from his savings, acquire a home for himself. Gen. Butler says: "Laboring men are out of employment and starving, after a quarter of a century of republican rule. * * We have in this country, even in its youth, almost infancy as regards the life of nations, richer men than in any other country in the world, and as poor men as any other country in the world, however enslaved that country may be, for a man cannot be poorer than starvation." General Butler's forcible presentation of the condition of the workingmen and working women of the United States is a strong argument against the industrial policy which has been pursued by the republican party, and it shows that the so-called "protective" system, which is the pride and boast of the republicans, has built up monopolies and crushed and impoverished labor.—Free Press.

One for St. John.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—I see by the Sentinel that "there is not a prohibitionist in Charlevoix that will not vote for Blaine or Cleveland, and as most of them are republican prohibitionists," takes great comfort in the thought. The writer of that paragraph is just a little off his base, I know of several men in Charlevoix who will vote for St. John and Daniel, and as to his republican prohibitionists they would be more of a curiosity than the St. John and Daniel streamer at Boyne City.

VILE SLANDERS REFUTED.

Searching Investigations of the Buffalo Scandals Prove Them False.

The Monthings of Obscene Slanderers Met by a Plain Statement of Facts.

[Buffalo special.]

The Independent Republicans of this city have made an official report to the National Committee, after an investigation of the charges against Gov. Cleveland. The report, which is so follows, has been adopted by the National Independent Committee:

To the Independent Republicans of the Nation:

As Republicans and lovers of good government, and having peculiar means of knowledge, we have been called upon by private letters and otherwise for information in regard to the character of our Democratic and Republican competitors for the chief executive office. We have felt it to be a duty, imposed on us by circumstance, to examine these states in detail and to make a formal statement of the results. We said candidates would have been necessary to satisfy ourselves, but it was done to satisfy others, and we have found no one, even Cleveland without knowing personally his general character or all topics as his life commenced, but without knowing either the people or the means of information of those who have made the charges, that we should not pretend to make a general statement without personal investigation. We have found that the charges against Democratic candidates are manifest for that purpose, carefully and diligently made such an investigation, and we have taken every available means to ascertain the precise facts in each case.

The general question of drunkenness and gross immorality which has been charged against Cleveland has absolutely false. His reputation for morality has always been good. There is no foundation for any statement to the contrary. He was sought out and nominated for the Mayoralty of Buffalo, and was supported by the vital portion of the larger portion of the intelligent and moral portion of the community, without regard to politics, on strong grounds. After he had gone through this contest, he was again put forward by one of the most disinterested citizens of Buffalo as a candidate for the Assembly, and was nominated and supported by the same class of fellow-citizens in this community, where he had lived for nearly 20 years, and where his life was known and his character understood.

This support would not have been given to him if he had been either a drunkard or a libertine. We have found no evidence of personal habits of an unmanly character, or of a character which would be considered by the community, where he had lived so long, as a quiet, orderly, self-respecting, and always highly respected citizen.

Since he assumed the present office his visits to Buffalo have been few and of short duration. The reports of his intemperate habits and his debauchery in our large cities, and the loss of those have long ground to justify the charges that have been made in the domestic. The slurs that he has recently taken part in a drunken and licentious banquet in Buffalo on the occasion of such a visit is entirely false.

We have found no evidence of such and thorough, in our investigation, as to amount to moral, adulterous, and intemperate habits of a woman of this city as attached to a local newspaper.

The circumstances out of which this story was fabricated occurred eight years ago. The parties to the transaction were well known to us, because they had resided for years in this city, and the younger of whom was 18 years old. Inquiries of the same nature that we have put to ourselves, and that the allegations respecting her adulterous and illicit intercourse with Cleveland, and the thirteen years ago, with two children, the younger of whom was 18 years old. Inquiries of the same nature that we have put to ourselves, and that the allegations respecting her adulterous and illicit intercourse with Cleveland, and the thirteen years ago, with two children, the younger of whom was 18 years old. The two witnesses who have produced has been invariably regarded in the general public opinion as the proper tribunal to ascertain the precise facts in such cases.

This support would not have been given to him if he had been either a drunkard or a libertine. We have found no evidence of such habits, and we are convinced, from our long standing, and to say that his general reputation in this city is that of a quiet, orderly, self-respecting, and always highly respected citizen.

THE JOURNAL

Charlevoix, Mich., August 28, 1884.

Around the County.

South Arm.

Mr. and Mrs. Cunningham, of Jordan, visited at Rev. H. C. Scofield's recently.

Mr. and Mrs. Chester Hardy, of Banks, rejoice in the possession of a young son.

Wheat harvest is now in progress. The prospect is quite flattering for an abundant crop.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Murphy attended the G. A. R. picnic at Horton's bay last Wednesday.

Mrs. T. F. Nelson, of East Jordan, and Miss Annie Bugbee, of Norwood, were guests of Mrs. J. R. Vance, on Thursday last.

Supervisor Warner and wife, of Warner township, and Mr. and Mrs. Buckly, of Jordan, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. McArthur recently.

Miss Hettie May, daughter of Rev. S. May, of this place, has returned home after a few months attendance at the Normal school at Valparaiso.

Mr. John McCormis of Durham, Ont., while visiting his son Samuel here, called on his old friend Mr. H. Vance, of Echo.

Mrs. Wm. Remm and family, living in Indiana, were at her father's, Mr. A. Hawks, last week, but have now gone to Banks to visit relatives there.

Rev. J. M. Smith and wife, also mother and sister are guests of James Bennett. Mrs. Smith, Sen., and daughter, expect soon to remove to Kansas.

A few of the South Arm people attended church in East Jordan on Sunday evening and listened to an able discourse by Elder Smith, formerly M. E. pastor here.

Our Sunday school picnic on Wednesday was well attended and everything passed off pleasantly. Free lemonade and splendid dinner were among the pleasant features of the occasion.

Mrs. J. R. Vance and children spent two days in Echo, and Mrs. Rae and children went to Intermediate last week, all in quest of blackberries which are quite abundant in some places.

Quite a number of the Sunday school people patronized the excursion on Sunday last. The school house key not being found there were no services held. This is more to be regretted for it was elder Blake's last appointment.

Tramps made a raid on H. C. Scofield's hen roost one night not long ago. They captured four fowls and thinking "prutios" would taste well with their soup, dug and carried off about two bushels. A similar proceeding was enacted at elder May's last week, the loss being ten chickens.

Burgess.

Hurrah for Uncle Josiah!

There is in Milwaukee one saloon for every twenty-six voters; and as half the people do not drink, every thirteen drunkards must support the one saloon. How many women take in washing to support the thirteen drunkards who support each saloon? Milwaukee Prohibitionist.

The burning of the Methodist churches in Wichita and Cawker city by the whiskyites will do the prohibition cause no harm, but much good. In the light of those burning buildings many people will be able to see the true character of the liquor traffic as they never saw it before.—Ex.

A Georgia correspondent of the Vermont Messenger says: "The effect in the prohibition counties has been startling. Labor has been improved 100 per cent and the condition of the laborers 1,000 per cent. Men who never worked but part of a week now put in six good days, and those who spent their entire wages at the saloons, leaving their wives and children to go to ill fare themselves, are now saving money and looking forward hopefully to the time when they shall own lands for themselves. The prohibition of the sale of liquor in these counties is the proudest thing Georgia has ever done. The remaining forty two will follow their example ere long. The prohibition counties have demonstrated the possibility of driving out the stuff, and the good that has followed will induce the others to follow suit."

Diving For Sea-Eggs.

The "sea-eggs" are a species of the family Echinidæ. Diving for them by the Fuegian women is one of their most painful and dangerous ways of procuring food, as they often have to follow it when the sea is rough, and in coldest weather. The following description is taken from Mayne Reid's serial, "The Land of Fire," in the April St. Nicholas:

The savages do not long remain idle, another resource engaging them—a fear for which the Fuegian native has obtained a world-wide celebrity—namely, diving for sea-eggs. A difficult, dangerous industry it is, and just on this account committed to the women, who alone engage in it.

"Having dispatched their proper breakfast, half a dozen of the younger and stronger women take to the canoe,—two in each,—and paddle out to where they hope to find the sea-urchins.

"Arriving there, she who is to do the diving prepares for it by stitching a little wicker-basket to her hip, her companion being intrusted to keep the canoe in place, a task which is no easy one in water so rough as that of the sea-arm chances to be now.

"Everything ready, the diver drops over, head foremost, as fearlessly as would a water-spaniel, and is out of sight for two or three minutes; then the crow-black head is seen bobbing up again, and swimming back to the canoe with a hand-over-hand stroke, dog-fashion, the egg-gatherer lays hold of the rail to rest herself, while she gives up the contents of her basket.

"Having remained above water just long enough to recover breath, down she goes a second time, to stay under for minutes, as before. And this performance is repeated again and again, till at length, utterly exhausted, she climbs back into the canoe, and the other lies on the basket and takes her turn at diving.

"Thus, for hours, the sub-marine egg-gatherers continue at their arduous, perilous task; and, having finished at last, they come paddling back to the shore.

"And on landing, they make straight for the wig-wams, and seat themselves by a fire—almost in it—leaving the spoil to be brought up by others."

Krupp's Big Hammer.

The great fifty-ton hammer in Krupp's works at Essen gained its name, "Dreier Fritz," and the inscription it bears, "Fritz, let fly!" in the following manner: When, in 1877, the Emperor William visited Essen, this steam hammer attracted his attention. Krupp descended to him the machinist, Fritz, who, he said, handled the hammer with such nicety and precision as not to injure or touch an object placed in the center of the block. The emperor at once put his diamond-studded watch on the spot indicated, and beckoned to the machinist to set the hammer in motion. Fritz hesitated out of consideration for the precious object, but Krupp urged him on by saying, "Fritz, let fly!" Down came the hammer, and the watch remained untouched. The Emperor gave it to the machinist as a souvenir, and Krupp added 1,000 marks to the present.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Abbott Kiss.

I saw the Abbott kiss on Monday night at the Baldwin. I had a good view of it. It will never do. I can give a superior article myself if I get as good a chance. The absolute truth is that Castle's recitation during the oscillation was at least an inch and a half from Abbott's lips. Now, I submit it to any girl, is that a kiss? Would she make so much fuss, get a fellow so close to her as that and remain where she was? I submit it to any man—the older the better—if he got as close to a woman's lips, would he stop there? No, most certainly not. The Abbott kiss is a failure. All in favor of the motion say aye. Aye! All to the contrary say no. ——. The ayes have it ——motion to adjourn.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Annual School Meeting.

The annual school meeting for this district was held at the school house, last Monday evening, about 40 taxpayers being present. Minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved, also the reports of receipts and expenditures, and estimates for the coming year.

The receipts and expenditures of the year were as follows:

RECEIPTS.

Money on hand Sept. 3, 1883	$755 29
Received from one-mill tax	369 79
Received from primary school interest fund	49 20
Received from tuition of non-resident pupils	4 75
Received from district taxes for all year gone	710 00
Received from all other sources	3 20
Total	$1,792 22

EXPENDITURES.

Paid male teachers	$700 00
Paid female teachers	352 50
Paid for all other purposes	330 39
Amount on hand Sept. 1, 1884	409 17
Total	$1,792 22

Estimates for the coming year were made and amounts voted as follows:

For teachers wages	$1,000 00
For wood	75 00
For janitor	75 00
For incidentals	50 00
Total	$1,250 00

Ten dollars was also voted as compensation to the director.

It was voted to have nine months school.

The matter of warming the building was discussed at length, and the board was finally instructed to procure a furnace, make the necessary excavations, chimneys, and ventilators and put the same in use as soon as possible, the work of putting in to be paid for from any money now on hand not otherwise appropriated. It was understood that a furnace from the company who are putting one into the new Congregational church would not have to be paid for until next spring after it had been given a fair trial. Removing the stoves will give space for three additional seats in each room, thus increasing the capacity as well as the comfort of the building.

For the office of moderator, E. Carpenter was elected his own successor, receiving on the first formal ballot 24 of the 37 votes cast.

Building Notes.

The McCabe boys are building a new barn on the lot east of their residence on Mason street.

Mr. Wilcox has sold his cottage near the music hall to Mr. Miley, of Terre Haute, Ind., who will occupy it with his family next season.

J. L. Sebringhaus moved his cottage on the upper terrace to the lot adjoining the music hall, and offers it for sale. This is done to enable him to build a cottage worthy of the old site.

J. T. Kirkpatrick has the frames up for two new cottages on the Chicago resort,—one for N. H. Blatchford, and one for John P. Wilson. Mr. K. has also the contract for a cottage for R. G. Dagne.

C. Y. Cook and wife are about to occupy as fine finished a house as there is in Charlevoix. The visitor enters a broad hall, to the left of which is a private parlor and bedroom. On the right is the main parlor, or, as Mr. Cook says, "the living room." From this room one has an unobstructed view of the whole of Round Lake, and nearly the whole business portion of Charlevoix. The bay window is a most noticable part of the room, and is very pretty as well as convenient. In the rear of this room is the dining room, and still further the pantry, kitchen, and wood shed. The pantry and kitchen are well furnished with shelves, cupboards, sinks, water, etc., and arranged with a view to convenience and saving of labor. Returning to the hall, before ascending, we examine the stairs and find a very creditable job of work. The steps are birch, and the trimmings and ornaments of birds-eye maple polished. The timber for this, as well as the entire finishing of the house was selected by Mr. Cook, cut and sawed to order, kiln-dried, and is but another proof of the beauty and value of our native woods for finishing purposes. The mouldings, trimmings, and ornaments around the windows and doors are entirely of ash, in Eastlake patterns, highly polished, and very handsome. Some very fine effects in natural graining can be found in every room. In the chamber are six rooms, finished in the same style as below, and arranged for the convenience and comfort of summer boarders. There is a rear stairway for use of help and ease of escape in case of fire. Above this floor is a commodious attic, high enough for storing a quantity of unused furniture, or setting up extra cots for sleeping, in case of a crowd. There is a cellar under the whole, in which will be placed a large furnace. It is capable of holding a large amount of wood as well as storage for fruit and vegetables. The well is under cover and furnishes pure cold water. The cistern pump is in the kitchen, and the dry-earth closet can be reached without stepping out doors. The woodwork for this residence has been entirely under the management of Messrs. Wheat and Carr, and the finishing by their hands. The masonry work and plastering is by Messrs. Lamoreaux, Myers, and Cook. The whole is a structure adding much to the material wealth and beauty of Charlevoix.

THE NEWS CONDENSED.

THE EAST.

A BOSTON dispatch says the United States steamer Talluposa, the celebrated craft that has for years been employed as a freighter for naval stores in winter and as a pleasure yacht for the Secretary in summer, came to an untimely end in Vineland Sound, being run into by a coal schooner and sunk. The ship was on her way from Boston to Newport when the disaster occurred, and had on board some of the personal effects of the Secretary and Mrs. Chandler, who were to have rejoined her at the latter point. The night was dark and a good many vessels were in the sound. The vessel which struck the Talluposa was the schooner James S. Lowell, of Bath, Me., from Baltimore for Portland. She is a large three-master, and was loaded with 900 tons of coal. The Talluposa was struck on the starboard bow and went down within five minutes. The officers and crew, numbering about 110 persons, were saved from the wreck by the schooner, all being accounted for except the following: Surgeon Black, William O'Donnell, of Boston, a bandsman; George Proctor, a colored saloon boy; —Foster, a colored servant.

EIGHTEEN persons sustained serious injuries by an accident on the New York and New England Road, near Quinebaug, Connecticut. A passenger coal car and a smoker were thrown down an embankment of twenty feet. J. W. Phelps, of Hyde Park, Massachusetts, received what may prove a fatal cut on the right temple. Silver has been discovered near Ritchie, W. Va., and prospectors are flocking to the mine. The last assay of ten mines showed $300 of silver and $41 of lead to the ton. An assignment to secure liabilities of $55,000 has been made by the Dunbar Coke Company of Fayette County, Pennsylvania.

THE schedules in the assignment of Hatch & Foote, the New York brokers, who recently failed, have been made public. They show the liabilities to be $4,057,000, of which $3,326,900 are secured. The actual assets are $238,874, about one-fourth of the nominal assets. The Sinking Fund Commissioners of Essex County, New Jersey, are shown to be short $26,000 in their accounts, and proceedings to recover the amount will be at once commenced.... There have been heavy frosts in New Hampshire, Vermont, and Connecticut, and crops are damaged in many places.

SIXTY citizens of Trenton, N. J., who favor extradition, have purchased a pottery-kiln at Pennington, and will transform it into an oven for burning bodies. The Rev. John W. Strauh, of the Bloomfield Catholic Church, Lindenwald, while crazed with disease, committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver.

ON the Chester rink track at Hartford, while the pacers Princess and George G. were being exercised in different directions for the 2:17 race, both drivers fell to the same way. The animals went into the air and fell flat, George G. died almost instantly, and was buried in view of the assembly. Princess received fatal injuries. The losses were valued at $5,000 each. This year's hop crop in this country is estimated to be almost one-fourth short of the average.

THE WEST.

DENNAN THOMPSON, in his unrivaled exposition of Joaquin Miller's poem, the natural, good-hearted New England farmer, is making his regular annual tour of the West, and occupies the boards of McVicker's Theater, in Chicago, this week. For eight successive seasons, Mr. Thompson has appeared before the public in this sterling play, and yet so great is its popularity that he is as great a pet in Milwaukee as was the first year of its issuance.

IT is thought that the value of the agricultural products of California this year will be $81,000,000. About $26,000,000 worth of the product will be exported.... Thomas Murphy, a mechanic living at Jackson, Mich., who is in bad health, became exerted the other night, and, thinking there were burglars in the house, attacked his wife with a pair of shears and stabbed her five times. She died to death in ten minutes.... Pollock, Wilson & Sons' establishment at 30th and Carr streets, Cincinnati, for the manufacture of saddlery hardware and chains, was destroyed by fire. Loss, $50,000.

THE Webster County Bank of Marshfield, Mo., has suspended with liabilities of $40,000 and assets estimated at $10,000 to $25,000.... The saw-mills of Little & Peck and G. W. Peck & Son, at Duluth, were burned, involving a loss of $100,000.

WHEN the special train containing eighty Poles who were to take the place of the striking miners at Bucksted, Ohio, arrived at that place a mob of strikers congregated and assaulted the leaders of the imported party. A free fight followed, during which an interpreter for the Poles was seriously injured and others received cuts

F. W. COOK,
Chairman committee, Muskegon.

Pay or Quit.

The finance committee of the g. o. p. is in straitened circumstances. Voluntary contributions are not large enough to nestle Blaine's success, and they resort to force to make up the deficiency. The New York Post of Aug. 28 says that "government officials connected with the geological survey have received the following extraordinary document:

HEADQUARTERS FINANCE COMMITTEE,
REPUBLICAN NATIONAL COMMITTEE,
WASHINGTON, D. C., August 26, 1884.

DEAR SIR—As we have not yet had the pleasure of hearing from you we are entitled to infer that your interest in the success of the grand old republican party is not such as is becoming to a beneficiary of the government, and a further silence on your part will be understood as equivalent to an expressed wish to resign your clerkship on or before March 1 next. Hoping for a satisfactory explanation, I am for the committee,

Yours respectfully,
GREEN B. RAUM.

The gentleman who received the above is a strong Blaine republican, and writes that up to the time of receiving this he "had intended forwarding a voluntary contribution of $100 for republican funds, but this slinte me up. I never yet did anything under threats."

Notes and News.

Republican farmers who feel like balking because Mr. Lace was not nominated at the republican state convention, may find consolation in voting for farmer Begole.—Enterprise.

After twenty-four years of uninterrupted power to make any and all laws that it pleased, the republican party at its recent state convention declares that "the republican party realizes the need of more efficient laws to protect the rights of the laboring man of the state in obtaining the just reward for their labor, and it therefore promises that it will favor the enactment of such lien laws and other measures as will carefully guard and promote the interests of the laboring man." The question very naturally arises why the republican party has not enacted laws for the protection of laboring men instead of at this late date promising to favor such enactments?—Traverse Bay Eagle.

Let his political opponents revile him as they will, Gov. Begole has been a clean, honest executive, and has given the state an excellent administration. — Marquette Mining Journal.

Over five hundred million dollars in gold and legal tender lying idle in the treasury vaults of New York and Washington, and nearly three hundred business failures in one week. These figures look well together.

The republican papers have stopped fooling with the democratic platform declaration that all taxation must be "exclusively for public purposes." They found it unprofitable to openly advocate public taxation for private benefit.— Washington Post.

How may man can vote for Blaine and feel a conscientious scruple about voting for Cleveland on the ground of morality, surpasses my conception, for I regard Blaine as one of the most corrupt men in public life.— Henry Ward Beecher.

Command us to the republican party of Michigan for genuine stupidity. Two years ago the party in that state promised to submit the question of prohibition to the people. It had votes enough in the legislature to do it but in obedience to the dictates of the liquor traffic it refused to do it. Now it has made precisely the same promise over again to the people. That will not work. Having broken the promise once it is reasonable to presume that it will do it again if it gets the opportunity. It ought to have tried some new scheme. It was exceedingly stupid to make precisely the same promise that it made two years ago.—Lever.

There is not a gentleman on the union state ticket, the news of whose nomination by acclamation was hailed with more gratification and pleasure than that of Col. Geo. P. Sanford, of Lansing, for the office of auditor general. His nomination will be a source of great strength to the ticket in Ingham county, besides it is giving honor where honor is due. Col. Sanford is a progressive democrat, a man of brains and an unlimited amount of push and energy. He is eminently fitted for the office for which he is nominated, and further, he is going to be elected. We voice the sentiments of a host of friends in this part of Ingham county in extending to him most hearty congratulations and assurances of cordial support.—Mason Democrat.

The Michigan Prohibitionist expresses very neatly the stupidity of republican attitude toward prohibition in this state as explained by the party organs. It says: "What for example, would have been the effect, say in 1880, of such a declaration as this from some leading republican journal: The republican party has declared against the extension of slavery into the territories of the Union, but state and national conventions cannot bind local constituencies on this question, therefore, it is quite possible to have a republican majority in congress or in a state legislature, without having a non extension majority? O, shades of Lincoln, Seward, Greeley and the New York Tribune! How would such words have grated on the ears of those and other fathers and founders of the republican party? How the mighty have fallen!"

The duty or tax on imported pig iron is $6.72 per ton, still the price of pig iron is steadily on the decline. A thousand tons of Tennessee brand was sold in July for $14.50 per ton of 2,268 pounds, while another brand was offered at $14 on cars to Louisville. Now as furnace men of the defunct Mason and Dixon line can lay down pig iron at that price without loss, and in our opinion a big one too. Hence it is proposed by a circular issued by a Louisville firm to all owners of furnaces in the United States urging them to bank up their furnaces for one month to reduce the stock on hand so that prices may advance. Will they do it? They must do it or high priced furnaces must go out out of blast. The Louisville Courier Journal very pointedly remarks in regard to, we might say, this infernal scheme of internal protection: "Here is an empirical remedy for a constitutional disease. Here is the principle of destruction urged as a means of protecting an infant industry. Here is proposed a method of starvation in order to nourish the vital energies of the people."—Elk Rapids Progress.

Abigail Adams.

Abigail Adams, the president's wife, was undoubtedly the most conspicuous American woman of her day, whether by position or by character. When writing to her husband she often signed herself "Portia," in accordance with a stately, and perhaps high-flown, habit of the period, and she certainly showed qualities which would have made honor to either the Roman or Shakspereon heroine of that name. In her letters we see her thoroughly revealed. While the battle of Bunker Hill was in progress, she wrote that it "was dreadful but glorious!" and in the depression of the battle of Long Island, she said: "If all America is to be ruined and undone by a pack of cowards and knaves, I wish to know it," and added, "Don't you know me better than to think me a coward?" When, first among American women, she represented her nation at the court of St. James, she met with equal pride the contemptuous demeanor of Queen Charlotte, and when her husband was chosen president, she wrote to him, "My feelings are not those of pride or ostentation upon this occasion; they are solemnized by a sense of the obligation, the important truths and numerous duties connected with it." When, finally, after four years, he failed of re-election, she wrote to her son: "The consequence to us is personally that we retire from public life. For myself and family I have few regrets. * * * If I do not rise with dignity, I can at least fall with ease." This was Abigail Adams. In person she was distinguished and noble rather than beautiful; yet it is satisfactory to know that when she was first presented at the British court she wore a white lute-string, trimmed with white crepe, festooned with lilac ribbon and mock-point lace over a hoop of enormous extent, with a narrow train three yards long, looped up by a ribbon. She wore treble lace ruffles a dress cap with long lace lappets and two white plumes, these last doubtless soaring straight into the air above her head in the extraordinary style familiar to us in Gilliray's caricatures of that period.

It was in those days no very agreeable task to be the wife of the president. Mrs. Adams has left on record a graphic sketch of the White house, where she presided for three months. The change in the seat of government had been decided upon for twelve years, yet the building was still a vast unfinished barrack, with few rooms plastered, no main stairway, not a bell within, not a fence without; it was disteasingly cold in winter, while the chief magistrate of the United States could not obtain for love or money a man to cut wood for him in the forest which then surrounded Washington. From Washington to Baltimore extended an almost unbroken growth of timber, varied only by some small and windowless huts. There could as yet be in Washington no such varied companionship as had given attraction to the seat of government at New York and then at Philadelphia; yet at Georgetown there was a society which called itself eminently polite, and Mrs Adams records that she received fifteen calls in a single day.—Harper's Magazine.

LITTLE AH SID.

Little Ah Sid
Was a Christian kid—
A cute little coon, you'd declare—
With eyes full of fun
And a nose that began
Right up at the centre of his hair.

Fat, and fat,
Was the Celestial brat,
As he plowed through the long summer day,
And brandished his cue
As he jabber'd to
Ih Chinkalent, Ah, 'tis said.

Once over a loom
That Ah Sid placed upon
A bumble-bee flew in the office;
Medium built,
Black as to hair and beady eye,
"Me catch one part of him wing."

Then with his sponge
He struck it a plunge—
This innocent bumble-bee—
And put its crumpled
Remains in a pan
For a cricket there had to chaw.

Down on the grass
Sat the little cardigan,
In such a fine state of mind,
Ah Sid with a grin
That a Chinaman only can,
"Me much one bumbaby, mine."

Little Ah Sid
Was quite a kid,
Not conducting himself like to guess
What kind of a long
He was holding a song
In the bath of the bee-killing tie.

"Kill-em! Kill-em!"
Ah Sid cried—he
Rose bumbaby, mine, had spoke—
"Kill-em! Kill-em! Bum
Dum on Mr Bum man—
I'm bad little boy, much bad!"

A ROGUE'S REWARD.

BY KENDRIGE.

"A strange motto for a family, is it not?" he asks, holding up the heavy seal ring he had taken from his finger.

"What is it? Translate—you know I can't read Latin," says my lady, looking up from the depths of those soft, easy cushions, against the dark velvet of which her neck and face and arms shone like pure Carrara.

The boys still chaser and drops his voice, as if the words held for him some strange foreboding.

"He who forgets shall be in turn forgotten."

"Yes, it is a queer one," says my lady, meditatively, gazing intently on the handsome, youthful face beside her. "Queer, too, that you should read it to memory—under such circumstances, you know. If it were different——" she pauses and shrugs her shoulders and waves her hand impatiently, then sighs and turns her face full to his. The ring falls to the floor, and Julian Frere catches her hand as it rests fluttering upon her breast!

"My darling," he cries, forgetful of the very words that gave rise to her emotion, "only answer me as I wish—as I need to answer, and we shall be happy—oh, so happy, if you will.

"Look down into my face—look again and her eyes are dark with passion, not with a half contempt for his unanimous in their dreary depths which he has never seen before.

"Do you think, Julian, that there are day dreams from which we must awaken, love scenes over which the curtain will fall—songs, when the little comedy has been played, and even the actors dismissed into oblivion?

My lady smiles, and looks away, far out over the waters of the Mediterranean, and the expression of confusion and contempt deepens in her eyes.

But Julian only sees a beautiful woman who day by day and week by week has lured him on to love and worship her.

He stretches out his arms to clasp her to them, but she makes no response as she has always done before.

"It has been no comedy on my part," he muttered, hoarsely. "You have no right to say it has been on yours."

"Ah, my friend, did I say that? I only meant—well, you will force me to use such plain words. That motto brought to mind the peculiar circumstances which surround us both. Here and——" she suddenly stops, then goes rapidly on—"here you are, I mean, engaged to a young lady, not beautiful, you say, but talented, trustful, and simple, one who would make you happy—oh, far happier than I could or would. For I am terribly selfish, Julian—" she laughs gayly as if in denial of the serious charge she so lightly brought against herself—"and I would not make you a good wife. I am too fond of throwing away maps at dear Mr Blanc's little green table. I like the society of men who are well to pay to hang with the—with the—oh, the fact is that a husband, you know, is just like your cook; you get used to his style, and tired of it, and naturally want a change. So will no one called dear Julian. We have proved ourselves together for a time. Shall we not part as friends, dear friends, if you choose, but—but nothing more, you know?"

A pause her hands and kisses them passionately.

"I care for no one else and can think of no one else now. Heavens forgive me, but I cannot!" he murmurs.

For a moment she says nothing, but rests in his arms, peaceful, content.

If no remorseful pierce disturbs his blissful feeling, shall she allow the shadow of a woman's form also to never rise to come between them then? To be sure, she is married—she has never told Julian that—but Lord Carlio is away off in Algiers, where she says is, and perhaps is dead, or nearly so, for the Africans are terrible fighters, they say. So she gives herself up to his caresses, and for an hour—an instant only it seems to him—she is happy in the silence which falls soothingly upon them, as the twilight steals over the quiet warm sea! chances all the brightness without to shadows which creep, creep slowly into the rooms and leave dim forms and shapes in every corner.

Many other days had been passed in like manner, and Julian Frere had been content to let them go in sweet forgetfulness of time, of place, of eternity Itself—content to sit at Isabel Carlios' feet, enslaved—enamored, if you like, but trapped of his own free will.

How long the time was since he had left his own home in England, he neither knew nor cared. How long since he left a sweet face—so dear to him once—he cared not and would not even remember.

Yet, gentle letters came very often, breathing love and truthfulness, but never a word of reproach at the cold answers which his unwilling fingers penned.

He had once imagined that he loved this English girl, with her tender manners and soft brown trustful eyes. But, oh, This miss, he had not then seen tender eyes flash with a passion whose fierceness enhances their brilliance, nor lips more than half willing for frequent meetings with his own. The gentle English girl should have his name—it was promised, and he was in honor bound to that. But then dark, twisty woman of the South, with her Italian arts of love and Parisian graces, which charmed and lulled his senses into dreamland—never could he winning his heart from her keeping, and what will he will be.

He went out from his room that evening, and left the ring with the strange motto engraved on it lying on the floor.

The next day he called at the Villa Carlio, but my lady was out.

The day after, at his accustomed hour, he went again.

My lady was still out, the footman said.

"But had she left no word—no message?" asked Julian.

"Oh, surely. If the signor came there was a little note."

Julian's hand trembled as he received a small, crumpled note, which the footman carelessly drew from his pocket.

Beneath the huge porch of the Fontbleau, where the moonlight streams down in a broad steel and energetic lines into the fantastic shadows, Julian read the letter:

"Caro mio," it began—oh, the soft Italian phrase which seems always sweet and tender from her lips—"caro mio, I have been happy, deeply happy last two days, and have come to a sensible resolution. If my lady Eva could find us shown the sense of which I shall presently make an exhibition, much trouble might have been averted.

"Dear Julian, you will stamp and curse and swear when I tell you. Well, so be it. I shall not be there to hear, but what I say is this—that we must part.

"For your little English girl will be happy in her inquisitive way—you and I—well, I must tell you my love land is coming home from the war in Algiers, for I am married. Why not tell you before? It matters nothing now, but I feel a perverse pleasure in Charlevoix, Mich., Sept. 4, 1884.

Around the County.

Bay Springs.

Wm H. Rogers' wheat averaged 32 bushels per acre.

G. C. Rivet has gone to Manitoulin island on business.

Col. O. F. Wisner has our thanks for a pamphlet copy of his poem, "Hadassah."

The infant daughter of Geo. Griffin died last Friday night of cholera infantum. She was about a year old.

The infant son of Samuel Hall died last Monday. Funeral services on Tuesday, conducted by Rev. G. W. Howe.

The spindle factory of Geo. C. Rose & Co., burned June 1st, has been rebuilt and is in full working order. Instead of running a bolting saw, as formerly, they have a new mill, carrying 30-inch saws, and cutting logs 30 feet long. They make 1,400 to 1,500 spindles per day, employing 10 to 12 men.

Mrs. J. W. McNeal's parents, Mr. and Mrs. David C. Hunt, from Three Oaks, Berrien county, are visiting in Bay Springs. Mr. Hunt is pleased with Bay Springs, and intends to purchase a place soon for a permanent home. He is 64 years old, and she is nearly as old. They are religious people, and we are glad the venerable couple have come to spend the evening of their lives with us.

Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Caldwell, Mrs. W. A. North, Mrs. G. C. Rivet, Mrs. D. Niver, and Emma Fluhrer, went with a hand-car a few days since to pick blackberries. When returning home, in the vicinity of M. W. Aldrich's place, the car was thrown from the track by a stick put there by some misguided specimen of humanity. The unfortunate party heard a snickering in the cornfield near them. All escaped with only slight bruises except Mrs. W. A. North, who was so badly hurt that she has since been unable to work, and is confined to her bed a part of the time. [A person guilty of such deviltry should serve the state behind prison bars until they learned the value of human life.—ED. JOURNAL.]

Ironton.

The church is nearing completion and will be dedicated soon.

R. M. Cherrie is in town for a few days to look over the furnace estate.

There are no new cases of scarlet fever in town. The doctor comes every day.

A large vessel is loading with pig iron for Cleveland, O. She will carry five hundred tons.

H. B. Chapman and wife, of Bay Springs, were visiting at the Pioneer House on Friday last.

It is rumored that all the furnaces in the state will shut down the fifteenth of the present month.

The furnace went into blast Sunday evening, it having been banked up for a week to repair the boiler and hotblast.

Mr. Hieth, at the Pioneer House, who had his leg broken some three weeks ago, is doing as well as can be expected.

The steamer M. W. Wright gave an excursion to Oyster Bay, last Sunday, to Indian camp-meeting. She was well loaded.

On the Blaine and Logan pole at Ironton, the flag is no where near the top, and strangers coming into our town enquire, "who is dead?" We say "Blaine and Logan."

South Arm.

The Nellie Booth has made frequent visits here of late.

T. C. Bird, of Ironton, attended the quarterly services here on Saturday and Sunday last.

Rev. Mr. Sparks has been on the sick list, but is now able to attend to his ministerial duties again.

Thomas Tyndall, who has been stopping at Ironton for a few weeks, was seen here again on Saturday.

Prayer meeting was held here on Saturday evening last, which is to be continued weekly. The next is to be held on Wednesday evening.

The welcome sight and sound of the Gazelle is again here. Her accommodating officers merit high praise for her safety and regularity.

Quarterly meeting services of the M. E. church were held here on Aug. 30 and 31. Unavoidable circumstances detained the presiding elder, but his place was acceptably filled on Saturday by Rev. Richard Tyndall, and on Sunday by Rev. S. P. May. A number of people from the county swelled the numbers present and a pleasant time was enjoyed.

Burgess.

Ellis Pierce, who has been sick, is slowly recovering.

Capt. Haynes, of Boyne, was visiting at Mr. Arnold's Sunday last.

Several republicans in Hayes straddle the fence; all going for Butler.

Indian camp-meeting closed Sunday evening, or rather Monday morning.

We hear it rumored that Josiah Gibson, who went to Louisville, Ky., last fall, is dead.

Grand Rally at Gibson's school house last Syturday evening—two men and a boy present.

Now the gay and festive threshing machine is heard in Hayes, the Hamlin brothers have started the music.

A young man from Charlevoix came very near losing one of George Cook's horses in Susan Lake Sunday.

Annual school meeting in district No. 4, had rather a slim attendance. One officer and four or five others to vote away the people's money.

Springvale.

Farmers are busy harvesting.

Blackberries and pickers are a good crop this year.

B. W. Foodick contemplates erecting a dwelling on his farm this fall.

David C. Webb, a veteran of the late war, has received a pension of $1,100.

Samuel Thatcher, and Wm. Adams, commence threshing for the farmers next week.

The schools are closed for this season in districts No. 1, 2, and 5. The school is in session in No. 4 at present.

J. P. Chew, who has been teaching in district No. 2 for the past five months, returned to his home in Hayes last week.

Will Not Crush My Manhood.

Fill not the glass for me
With wine, bright ruby red;
No, no; far better would it be
To rest among the dead
Than thus to seek relief
From care and grief and pain;
The cup, oh, cannot quench
Ton, urge me not again.

I can not drown my sorrow
With bright and foaming wine;
It can not bring vacant joy
To this sad heart of mine;
Rather, it seems to me,
My brain scorch all on fire,
My heart filled with some base,
Unholy, bad desire.

Then take this glass away,
Remove the wine from sight,
I will not crush my manhood,
And drink with yonder night.
When Heaven sees fit to free me
From sorrow's galling chain,
My heart will be all lightness,
All joy and peace again.—Irish World.

Governor Robinson, of Massachusetts, in a recent address before the social temperance union, of Boston, said: "Yesterday I visited the south Boston house of correction, and as I passed around through the shops and looked the men in their faces, and as I went into the female departments and saw the inmates there, I said to the master, 'rum has done about all this work.' 'Yes,' said he, 'nearly all is the harvest of intoxicating drink.' You can see it in the faces of these people. It is the same story at Sherborn among the women there. You could not spend an afternoon at that institution without having the conviction brought home to your minds with an indelible impression. It is the same story in every one of our penal institutions. But this is only one phase of the evil. It is presented elsewhere. In business life, in public life, we are confronted all the time with the terrible evils that come out of the debasement of men who will surrender themselves to drink. I need not speak of the family. I need not allude to the home, we all appreciate the misery which intemperance causes. Now, it is such an evil as that presenting itself to us all the time, that we want to array ourselves together and move forward solidly against."

Alcohol as a Drink.

Omitting all reference to the mental and moral ravages of intemperance, it would require a lifetime to recount the pains and aches, the malignant diseases induced by the demon intemperance. We have already seen that all alcoholic liquors impair, retard and complicate digestion always and everywhere, both in the cases of sick and the well, thus preventing the normal and full nourishment of the system. Some of the robust may endure this for a time, but the sick may safely avoid all combinations of it, in the matter of digestion, as they need all of the strength possible, that they may resist the inroads of disease. It always and everywhere wastes power—never generating any—prevents the renovation of the blood, the whole body, increases the labors of the heart, by which it must weaken that organ, deranges the brain and nerves, vitiates the blood and all of the digestive juices, none of which effects are favorable to even the robust, while none of the sick can tolerate any such antagonistic agencies.

The action of alcohol—as a drink, medicine or a bath—is always in the line of paralysis. Let this thought be emphasized; it always and everywhere tends to benumb, derange and eventually impair and destroy the vital tissues. In illustration, observe the "rum-blossom" of the drunkard, the red and enlarged nose. The blood vessels are so paralyzed that they can not perform their ordinary labors, from which fact, in consequence of their relaxed state, the blood is not urged on, the vessel becoming engorged at particular places—in the face more especially—the accumulation and engorgment increasing the size of the nose, red enough to serve as a warning—like a light-house—to guard the young from being wrecked on the hidden rocks of drunkenness!

Alcohol is a "two-edged sword," fearfully destroying the vital forces. It attacks both directly and indirectly, first reducing the power of all of the organs of the body, then indirectly aggravating the evils by reducing their nourishment, by impairing digestion. This is an apt illustration of the Bible assertion that "if one member suffers, all will suffer with it."—Golden Rule.

Notes and News.

The Germans of Ohio are solid for Cleveland.

Cryolite, a mineral which is of great value in the potash manufacture, has been discovered in the Yellowstone Park. Heretofore it has been obtained only at Greenland.

It makes the clerks in the capitol square terribly to be compelled to pay up that little assessment. They feel as though it was throwing money away.—Lansing Journal.

A Denver oleomargarine establishment manufactures a ton and a half per day and uses 250 gallons of fresh milk every twenty-four hours. Just what constitutes the remainder of the 3,000 pounds is not stated.

Fifteen years ago, in Philadelphia, a daughter of General Dodge was divorced at 2 p. m. and married again at 8 p. m. to George Gouldige, to whom she gave $50,000. She is now suing for divorce from him because the money is gone.

Detroit had a Mother Hubbard excursion last week. It was a loose affair. Before it ended a dozen men and half as many girls had bruised and bleeding bodies, and spent the balance of the night at the central station.

A Cheboygan fire which, might have been a big blaze had it not been put out, had in its earliest stages originated from a tobacco pipe placed meetinguished in the pocket of a coat which was afterwards hung up in a hotel barn.

British Burmah, according to a recent census, covers as great an area as England, Scotland and Wales. Its population, a little more than that of London, includes 246,239 more men than women. Still it shows signs of unprecedented growth.

The Irish population of the earth is as follows: At home 7,500,000; in England, 2,500,000; in Scotland, 2,000,000; in Canada, 2,000,000; in Australia, 1,000,000; in America, 12,500,000; elsewhere, 5,000,000. A total in round numbers of 32,500,000.

Colorado now, 8 years old as a State, counts a settled population of 300,000, and a taxable valuation of $210,000,000, representing an actual property value of $600,000,000. It is traversed by nearly 3,000 miles of railroad, four trunk lines connecting Denver, the capital city, with the East.

There is no sadder sight than a family of growing boys and girls, or grown-up young men and women, accepting coldly and carelessly every form of sacrifice and favor from loving parents, who are wearing out their lives in their service, and reaping only ingratitude and indifference in return.

During the republican convention at Chicago, the hall in which the delegates got the principal part of their inspiration, took in $14,400 in one day. Anybody that "throws away his vote" for St. John is a crank. The republican party is a "goselmough temperance party for me."—Western Wave.

The sources of our supply of lumber in Canada and in Michigan are disappearing quite as rapidly as in Ohio or New York, and long before the trees that we plant now have grown to a size for use, the prices they will then bring will prove it to have been a good investment from the beginning.—Dr. Franklin B. Hough.

Twenty-five young men of Boyerford, Carbon County, Pa., have formed a co-operative society to provide themselves with gold watches. They pay $1.00 weekly into the treasury for a year, and every two weeks one of them draws a watch by lot. A Mauch Chunk jeweler has contracted to furnish them with twenty-five watches at $50 each.

A young son of a Connecticut preacher recently joined a band of juvenile cut-throats, called the "Wakefield Nutmeggers." He was introduced by his guide as "Jackass," and the password at the threshold of the lodge-room was "Can he cut bloody oats?" He was treated so roughly during the initiation that he disclosed the secrets to his parents.

A Chinese journaker in San Francisco came down on the price of a life-sized deity to a reporter from "twenty-fi dolla to sixee dolla." He explained that a joss was no better than that much wood and paper until after a priest had consecrated it and placed a speck of red paint on each of its eyes. This is supposed to give it the power of seeing not only all the past but through the future to the end of time.

Alba is situated seven miles north of Mancelona and nine miles south of Elmira. It has good soil on all sides the best of any land in the vicinity of the G. R. & I., north of Cadillac. About three miles east of the place, there lies a tract of solid pine timber, twenty miles broad, and extending south as far as Missaukee county. The remainder of the country around Alba is timbered with hardwood such as maple, beach, birch, elm, hemlock, oak, basswood and cedar. The place now has 500 inhabitants and contains eight business houses, one saw mill and planing mill, one broom handle factory, one cant hook handle and bowl factory, one blacksmith shop, a hotel and saloon. The town needs a lawyer, baker, dressmaker, meat market, and a man with sufficient funds to loan on real estate. There is every prospect of a new railway from Bellaire, to Alpena, touching at Alba and Gaylord. Such a line would be a great benefit to the town, as it would give the merchants the advantage of lake freights.—Michigan Tradesman.

The absence of all surgical attendance in the field does not add to the satisfaction of service in the Chinese army. The theory advanced to explain this brutality is not so much a callous indifference to human life as a superstition, akin to that of "the peculiar people," who refuse all medical advice to their children. The men who gets a bad wound is regarded as one whom the gods mean to die. For a like cause the Chinese are reluctant to rescue the drowning.

The insurance commissioner of the state has applied to the courts for the appointment of a receiver to close up the affairs of the Michigan Mutual Fire Insurance company of Grand Rapids. This company was organized in November, 1883. It has written 2,466 policies, aggregating $1,700,000. The losses to July 18 were $692,000, of which only $5,000 have been paid, leaving $687,000 to be assessed on outstanding premiums.

By fusion the party in power can be made to face the united opposition—a very desirable consideration. A party is thus put upon its mettle. If its course has been such as to commend it to the people it will be continued in power. If it has failed to satisfy the people each class that has a grievance can unite with every other offended set and in this way secure a united victory instead of a defeat in detail. A party ought to hold power no longer than it can satisfy the majority of the people. In this way alone can the responsibility be firmly placed on a party's shoulders.

John Coyne, of Denver, has ordered a gold-mounted collar for his dog. One night not long since Coyne's house took fire, and being a light affair, was being rapidly swallowed up, but as a heavy sleeper, he did not hear the crackling flames, and would soon have been cremated had not his dog burst his kennel open, rushed into his bedroom, and scratched him in the face until he wakened up. So narrow was his escape that he had not even time to get his pocketbook from his pillow.

Lessops has a running account with sleep, taking twenty-four hours at a time, and at another none for five or six nights. In traveling he gets into the first compartment at hand, and sits anywhere; if he finds an agreeable companion he talks, if not he folds his arms and goes to sleep, never waking until he reaches his destination. When he went down the other day to Chenoay, near Bourdeaux, he requested the guard to wake him lest he should go beyond. On a voyage from Marseilles to Alexandria he kept 107 hours out of the 120 of the voyage, and then not for some days.

Editors in German-Poland are leaning with a vengeance what is meant by liberty of the press under Prince Bismarck. One of them has spent five months of the past year in prison, and has six months more to present. Another has been condemned to eleven and one-third months imprisonment. A third is now in prison for fifteen months, a fourth for three months, and a fifth for four months. A total in figures of three years and eight and one-third months' imprisonment for editors in one year. Only two political papers exist in Posen with editors not in prison.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat is a republican paper and is now using all kinds of unscrupulous means to secure the election of Blaine and Logan, notwithstanding it was only on the 23d of May last that the following compliment to the planned knight appeared in that paper: "He is an unclean man, and the people will not have him. He stands self-convicted of prostituting the high office he has held to build up a private fortune, of colluding with corruption for dishonest money. His record would damn him." Remember, this is not a "democratic lie," but an editorial in one of the staunchest republican papers of the south or west.—Mission Democrat.

The Calhoun monument, which is under course of construction at Louisville, was seen in embryo the other day. The monument will be an elegant structure of gray granite, 10 feet square at the base and very massive throughout, 8 feet high, and finished in the highest style of monumental art. The front section will bear the following inscription: "The State of South Carolina erects this monument to mark the resting place of her favorite son, John C. Calhoun, unsurpassed in patriotism, talents, and virtue." The huge block will have a highly-polished column at each corner, with an elaborately-carved capital surmounting the same; on the top above, the great seal of South Carolina in bas-relief of pure bronze will be inserted in the granite.

THE EAST.

THE clearing-house exchanges for last week $856,103,187, were $30,382 less than the previous week and about 30 per cent. with the corresponding period in 1887 show a decrease of 24.7 per cent.

SENATOR HENRY B. ANTHONY died under sudden death at Providence, R. I., at the age of 65. The deceased was born of Quaker parents at Cranston, R. I., April 1, 1815. He received his early education in the place of his birth, and needed a college education at Brown University, where he graduated A. B. in 1837 and A. M. in 1840. He became editor and publisher of the Providence Journal. His success as an editor and journalist was at once assured. Under his charge the paper increased rapidly in circulation, and finally became one of the leading protestant newspapers in the United States. Mr. Anthony's political career was not less brilliant. After holding various municipal offices, he was, in 1849, elected Governor of Rhode Island. He was soon elected to the office in 1850, and would have been elected a third term had he accepted the nomination. Eight years later he was chosen United States Senator. As such and as a leader in party councils he was unrivaled, which is substantially the history of his career from 1857, when his last term expired, to 1873 and 1879 he was chosen by the Republican President pro tem of the Senate. He was always a staunch supporter of the Republican party.

DANIEL PIERPONT, clerking book in the First National Bank of Portland, Oregon, was arrested on a Pacific Mail steamer at New York for stealing from the bank $7,000, deposited by the Northern Pacific Railway. President Archbe was one of the first persons who published in a dispatch, but given at Newport by A. G. Benedict.

THE WEST.

A RAILROAD car attached to a circus train caught the town Greeley, Colo. Seventy-five men were sleeping in the car at the time. Ten men were crushed, and several others were badly scalded. A dispatch from Denver gives the following particulars of the accident: At 11 o'clock last night the train belonging to the Anglo-American circus, Mr. Dutton proprietor, left Fort Collins for Greeley, on the Greeley, Salt Lake and Pacific road. Forty minutes later, when near Greeley, the sleeping-car, in which seventy-five men, employed as roustabouts in the circus, were asleep, caught fire and was wholly consumed. Ten men perished and two more were seriously and five slightly burned. The fire was communicated from an open porch with which the car was filled to a quantity of gasoline which was being carried in the same car, causing an explosion.

Evansville, Ind., was visited by a terrific wind, rain, and hail storm, lasting over an hour. The steamer Silverthorne, with steam up, had her chimneys blown over board. The Jewish Throop was badly wrecked. Many houses were demolished, and roofs and chimneys blown off. The steamer Belmont was lost in the harbor below Evansville, and ten or fifteen persons were drowned. Among the lost are Capt. John Smith, E. C. Risch and son, Miss Laura Lyon and sister, Sallie Broad and mother, and others unknown. The loss was valued at $15,000.

THE Chicago Tribune prints extensive reports of the condition of the corn crop in Indiana, Kansas, Nebraska, and Missouri. The reports indicate a magnificent corn crop for 1888. The reports are especially gratifying from Kansas and Nebraska, where the acreage in corn has been largely increased, while the prospects are of the brightest. According to the reports, Indiana will easily beat all previous records in the matter of a bountiful harvest.

The Governor of Montana sent a special agent to investigate the reports of starvation among the Pegans. It was found that in a band of 2,000 the deaths for lack of food averaged one per day. The Governor has urged the Secretary of the Interior to issue full rations to the sufferers until Congress can take action.

STOKING miners at Sunk Hollow, Ohio, reassembled a riot at 2 o'clock on Sunday morning, Aug. 31, by firing several hundred shots at the guards. William Hare was killed and two others received serious wounds. A hopper worth $4,000 was burned, and the telegraph wires were cut. In response to a call by the Sheriff, Gov. Hoadly ordered the militia companies at Lancaster and New Lexington to be in readiness to march.

DRIFTS whose crop of this year will yield 43,982,969 bushels, of excellent quality. This is the largest crop of the Salle, except that of 1886, when the yield was 48,540,000 bushels. The oat crop will produce 33,860,253 bushels, or about 10.2 bushels to the acre. The barley crop will yield about 1,000,000 bushels. Corn has suffered from drouth, and is about 75 per cent. of an average crop. Reports of the corn crop in Illinois, says a Chicago paper, are not quite as encouraging as previous reports. There is little chance to note in town reports. The prospects are very good. In Wisconsin, Nebraska, and Kansas an immense yield is promised.

An incendiary fire at Missoula, Montana, swept away twenty-two buildings, valued at $30,000. The skee factory of Rice & Hutchins, at Marlboro, Mass., worth $30,000, was also burned.

On reports of the State Veterinarian, the Governor of Illinois has decided pleuro-pneumonia epidemic among cattle in nine herds, and quarantined their owners from transporting them without a certificate of good health.

THE SOUTH.

THE City Marshal of Sharpsburg, Ky., killed Dr. Daniel Huey for resisting arrest. A Deputy Sheriff at Hot Springs was compelled to shoot a horse-thief whom he was conveying to the State Penitentiary, and the Coroner's jury indorsed the act. A Louisville policeman finally wounded a notorious footpad named John Lands, who was sought in the act of robbing a citizen.

BENNY JOHNSON confessed for the murder of his wife was hanged at Sherman, La. Schip Molly, a negro who murdered Luther Seely, a young white man, in January, was hanged at Tuscaloosa, Ala. The local militia were at the jail door to prevent a mob. Ward was hanged at Natchitoches, La., for the murder of Scott Carter (colored). Willie Williams, alias Twitch, was hanged at Franklin, La., for the murder of William Burgess, Feb. 3. As the black caps was drawn Williams shouted, "O, God! save me! O, God! save me!"

THE four villains who last May wrecked an Illinois Central train at Duck Hill, Miss., have been captured by Pinkerton detectives. The motive was revenge on the engineer, who was killed by the plot. The officials are in jail.

SINCE June 1 the Lynchburg Tobacco Association has sold 24,000 hogsheads of tobacco, and during August the sales reached 1,225,000 pounds. The leaves of the plant are unusually small this year, thus changing the type of Virginia tobacco.

COL. E. H. CRUMP, the South Carolina despotaph, indicted for complicity with his son Beaux Crump in the murder of Marshal Richards at Unionville, will not be prosecuted. The State's Attorney of Union County, where Crump lives, ordered a nolle prosequi in his case. This ends his case, and indignation, especially on the part of the colored citizens, against those who arrested him.

At Augusta, Ga., dispatch announces the death of Bishop George Pierce, of the Methodist Church South.

Pacific Railway Commission has secured a sufficient amount of extra supplies to be sent to the starving Pegans at the Black-foot agency. The case was accomplished, with the approval of the President, by applying unexpended funds from appropriations for other tribes.

MR. ST. JOHN, an employe of the General Land Office, was sent to Colorado to investigate certain complaints. In Las Animas County he found that forty-three of the public domain inclosed with barbed wire, bearing signs discussing death for cutting or having wire-nippers.

POLITICAL.

GEORGE FORTUNE, of South Bend, was nominated for Congress by the Democrats of the Thirteenth Indiana District. Congressman Hardy, who has been renominated by the Republicans of the Second Virginia District, and F. A. Morris was nominated by the Republicans of the Sixth Virginia District, and R. M. Mayo by the Republicans of the First Virginia District. Gen. Walker, of Connecticut, has written to the Chairman of the State Democratic Committee declining to be a candidate for re-election.

ARKANSAS voted for State and county officers and members of the Legislature on Monday, Sept. 1. The returns indicate the election of Simon P. Hughes, the Democratic candidate for Governor, by a majority of 40,000 or more. The Legislature will be largely Democratic. The constitutional amendment repudiating the State debt is believed to have been carried. Notwithstanding a very large vote was polled, there was not a peaceable and quiet one. The National Executive Committee of the National Labor party decided not to hold a party convention, but issued a "declaration" indorsing the principles of the People's party and its candidate, General Butler.

A CALL has been issued for a State convention of the People's (Bellamy's) party for Massachusetts, to be held at Worcester the 24th inst.

GEORGE R. DAVIS has been renominated for Congress by a faction of the Republicans of the Third District of Illinois. The Democrats of the Twenty-first Ohio District nominated Martin L. Fenn, and the Republicans of the Fourth Virginia put forward Col. Brady, a protege of Mahone. The Democrats of the Seventh Indiana District nominated W. D. Newman. Daniel Ermentrout was renominated by the Democrats of the Eighth Pennsylvania District, Edgar Weeks by the Republicans of the Seventh Michigan, and John J. O'Neill by the Democrats of the Eighth Missouri. Judge John Reeder will run independently in the Tenth Kansas. Jerry B. Murphy was nominated by the Democrats of the Second Iowa. The Greenbackers and People's party, in convention at Monmouth, Ill., indorsed Mr. Neece, the Democratic nominee for Congress. The Democrats and Greenbackers of the Eighteenth Pennsylvania District nominated Timothy F. Tarsney.

GEN. BUTLER, after addressing a Gompers picnic near Harrisburg, Pa., journeyed to New York City, and made a speech before the State Greenback Convention. He then proceeded to Detroit and Detroit quoted to an audience estimated at 25,000 in numbers. At Grand Rapids and Muskegon, Mich., he addressed large open air assemblages. Thence he jumped over into Illinois, and spoke to a large assemblage in Battery D Armory.

THE citizens of Vermont, on the 3d inst., elected a Governor, with other State officers, two members of Congress, and a Legislature, which will choose a successor to Senator J. S. Morrill. A dispatch from White River Junction says the indications are that the majority for Pingree, Republican candidate for Governor, will be about 21,000, and that the Republican majority will be about 20 per cent. Merchant, of Burlington, the home of Senator Edmunds, gives the largest Democratic majority ever known in that city.

THE Democrats of Connecticut renominated Gov. Miller, and put forward George G. Sumner for Lieutenant-Governor, D. Ward Northrop for Secretary of State, and Alfred E. Burdsall for Treasurer. The Republican State Convention, at Hartford, nominated Gov. Bulkeley, Hon. Morris Tyler for Governor, and James E. Mitchell and Henry C. Ives for Lieutenant-Governor. Resolutions were adopted indorsing Protection and Reciprocity, and appreciating the Republican national platform, and indorsing the action of the recent Republican of American citizens at home and abroad, and eulogizing Blaine and Logan.

THE Massachusetts Democratic Convention, in session at Worcester, nominated Judge William L. Endicott for Governor, Hon. George H. Robinson was renominated for Lieutenant-Governor, in the Massachusetts Republican State Convention. The Wisconsin Republican Convention nominated Gov. ADDITIONAL NEWS.

CHARLES J. FOLGER, Secretary of the Treasury, died on the 4th inst. at Geneva, N. Y., in his 68th year. His demise is directly attributable to overwork. For two weeks he had been unable to lie down, and he died while sitting in a chair. Up to within a couple of hours of his death he insisted upon exercising. The deceased was born at Nantucket, Mass., April 16, 1818. In 1837 his father removed to Geneva, N. Y., to which place Mr. Folger followed shortly after. After leaving college Mr. Folger studied law, and was admitted to the bar when 21 years old. His first office was that of clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, to which he was appointed in 1841, and was soon after made District Attorney for Ontario. In 1851 he was elected Judge of Ontario County, and in 1855 he was elected to the New York State Senate as a Democrat, which party he had adopted on its formation. He continued in the State Senate until 1869, when President Grant appointed him Assistant United States Treasurer for New York City. He was elected Judge of the Court of Appeals the highest court in the State of New York in 1876, and on the death of Chief Justice Church, in May, 1880, he was appointed to fill the vacancy, and in the following November was elected to the place for the term of fourteen years. In November, 1881, he resigned the judgeship to accept the Secretary of the Treasury in President Arthur's Cabinet. He was against Grover Cleveland for Governor in 1882, and defeated by nearly 200,000 majority. The Treasury Department of Michigan was burned on the 5th inst. out of respect to the late Secretary Folger all the Treasury Department will be closed on the day of Mr. Folger's funeral.

Awful Work of a Cyclone on the Ohio River, Near Hudson, Kentucky.

A Passenger Boat Upset, and Seventeen Passengers Find a Watery Grave.

[Evansville (Ind.) special.

A tornado lasting fully an hour struck this city at noon this morning. When the storm ceased and a view of the damage could be had it presented a terrible sight. The city had been visited from east to the river. No a marvelous escape from a entirely escaped injury. Most unfortunately was the Evansville Belle, which left for Henderson, Ky., at 10 o'clock, with over 200 people on board. The boat was caught in the tornado and capsized in the river. Seventeen persons are known to have been drowned, and the number may be much larger. The boat was a total wreck. The tornado left a path of destruction through the city, from the Illinois Central Railroad to the river, a distance of about a mile and a half. Hundreds of houses were blown to the ground, and many others were unroofed. The Methodist Episcopal Church, a large structure, was blown to the ground. The Catholic Church, a large structure, was also blown to the ground. The Catholic Church, a large structure, was also blown to the ground. The Catholic Church, a large structure, was also

Notes and News.

The Marquette Mining Journal has ceased and hauled out, daily paper in Michigan, outside of Detroit.

The question often asked, but never satisfactorily answered, "Is beer an intoxicating?" was illuminated to some extent near Detroit recently. The Roman Catholic and their guests appear to have got firmly enough on a pure beer for within a few hours to murder one man, place another at death's door, and cut and dash half a dozen others.

Some difficulty is being experienced in persuading the workmen in the iron mills and coal mines of Ohio that great times have come again. The men are being discharged or cut down in large numbers and want to know the reason why. Every discharge and every cut is a small mean for Tariff. The general will reap the benefit of the troubles at the public.—Detroit Times.

The true friend of temperance should shun the prohibition party as he would shun a viper, for all its motion is straightway into the enemy of the whiskey democracy.—Republican Argus. The "whiskey democracy" awoke and had fallen after the Plow will be writing to clear new paths for its new scamps, and if they come decent and respectable folks will take them in snowballs. They have done a good deal of pioneering in their day, in fact, they make up the great number party of the country, behind which cohabit so many pleasant memories of useful and patriotic work done for the nation. Even the prohibition party was quite little, the "whiskey democracy" passed a prohibitory law. The "Good and Moral" party repealed it as soon as it came into power, hence crawling to the other super force one single chance for its life.—Ex.

The amusement-loving citizens of the four largest western cities, New York, was interested Sept. 20, from circumstances suggested by Gen. Ewing's order to Gen. Sheridan, to the effect that if the Chicago Democrats should carry the Illinois election, the frame work of the Chicago and Galena near the upper bridge, would be burned. Similar news stirred up the Democrats of New York to the extent of a torch light procession, which was followed by a fire in the Tenderloin district, which destroyed half a dozen houses, and caused a loss of $100,000. The Democrats of Chicago, with few exceptions, had little claim to the title of incendiary.

The suggestion that his action on the Blaine letter was a deliberate bid for preference to the capitalists controlling three or four states, is not to be lightly dismissed, for it is a very grave charge against the integrity of a candidate for the presidency. Corporations per corporations have had long enough, and more than enough, to do for the country, and the people have been the sufferers. Corporations have been in the saddle, and have been the ones to ride the people, with few exceptions, and little claim to the title of statesmen.

The following address was adopted unanimously by the National Conference of Independent Republicans held at Chicago, Sept. 18:

There were six hundred and fifty delegates present, representing sixteen States and Territories.

To our Fellow Citizens of the United States.

The imminent issue of the Presidential election has become purely and wholly political. It concerns the national honor and character, and honesty of administration, and the welfare of the whole country, much more than the platforms of the two great parties, which have been so long in close alliance, and so nearly identical in position taken by or claimed to be in accordance with the wishes of the great corporations, trusts which the platforms of the two parties

MR. BLAINE'S RECORD.

Terrible Republican Indictment of the Presidential Candidate.

After Pledging His Word of Honor to Mulligan, Blaine Broke His Pledge.

The Story of His Railway Transactions and the Mulligan Letters.

Other Jobbery of the Republican Candidate for the Presidency.

TWO months ago the New York Evening Post printed a calm and serious review of Mr. Blaine's railroad transactions, which were prefaced by the announcement that "his nomination as a candidate for the highest office in the Government, or any other," was considered "an accident previewing, which can only be accounted for by the desire of his friends to have an extraordinary and unexplainable candidacy on the popular forgetfulness."

The record of those charges which, in the opinion of the Post, Mr. Blaine "will have to answer if he can be elected to the Presidency, is then in the spring of 1869 a full revenue bill, which, in the form in which it finally passed the Legislature of Arkansas, was before the House in its amendments. An attempt to defeat the bill by an amendment was on the point of being successful when Mr. Blaine, then Speaker, went up to the Capitol, leaving his chair, and in order that the amendment was not carried he ruled the motion out of order. The bill was then passed, and Mr. Blaine, immediately after some negotiations, secured from them, as a reward, his appointment as selling agent in Europe of the bonds of the State of Arkansas, and received a number of such bonds as his perquisites. The leading features of this transaction appeared in two letters of his, all drawn inside purple, dated respectively June 29 and July 4, 1869. These charges, the Post continued, were always preceded by evidence substantially the same as that which we have given in the case of Mr. Blaine's connection with the Little Rock and Fort Smith railroad land grant, which land grant, were received by act of Congress, Mr. Blaine can safely know, in 1870, but knew it in 1869. In that year Mr. Blaine was a director in the Little Rock and Fort Smith railroad company, and at that time he was directly interested in the Northern Pacific railroad land grant, which, it is said, "had been perfected and the additional alternate lands been chosen." Mr. Blaine, with some odds evidence of his interest by a subsidy of bonds, and by the promise of a commission which subsequently expanded, he said, would be $12,000, and the number of acres at land possession. The charge, it said, was "a very rare one; he couldn't touch it with a ten-foot pole." Either for $25,000 Mr. Blaine accepted the money, let the company go on with the work, and then, when never delivered, sold Mr. Blaine retained the money.

The peculiarity of this transaction is thus pointed out: The authorized stock of the company was $5,000,000, and the cost of the road was to cost exclusive of the lands, about $1 million. Land in Congress across. The floor of the road was two miles long, and at the time of Blaine's entry to Fisher it was, he says, being sold on terms of $2 an acre, which would leave much a hundred dollars of $10,000. As the Speaker of the House must be taken to have known about the circumstances of the road, the commissioner, and the land, and the terms of the contract, he should, if he knew himself, as a gift unknown to an enterprise dependent for its success on the support of the Speaker, yet Mr. Blaine's statement that the transfer was never made to him, and he never received a cent in any way the stock or the other.

The next charge is that Mr. Blaine "obtained certain letters, which there is every reason to believe contained matter gravely compromising him, from a privately expressible witness. Mr. Blaine's version of the matter is that he was a member of a committee of Congress, called parts to his city, by pledging his word of honor to return them, then broke this pledge, retained them to force, and subsequently read such of them as he pleased to the House in aid of his pleading; that this conduct, if not legally criminal, was morally such as ought to be the Chief Magistrate of a great nation ought to be very suspected of."—Springfield Republican.

His short review as an executive officer of the Government, and the various frauds he has made during the past eight years to keep the public from the knowledge of his transactions, has demanded an "exceptional and theatrical, including a strong force for misdeeds, and an absence of correct conviction, the sober judgment and the steadiness of character which are needed to make him a safe counsel of any kind, or reasonable administrative office; and the means of his nomination, and the methods by which the means in which his history has recently been heralded and produced is a good example—very too close an approach to the advertising devices of a circus or other public show to make the confidence of any person—nothing to them anything but a humiliation for the party which offers it."

THE LETTERS TO FISHER.

As a witness or an attorney on the part of Mr. William Walter Phelps to reply to these charges, the Post three weeks afterward printed the following documents and comment:

The story about Mr. Blaine's connection with the Little Rock and Fort Smith railroad land grant has floating around a good deal in the spring of 1875. So he met it in the House in this fashion, April 6, of that year, admitting that he held bonds of the road:

"I will say that some of the property involved in a member of Congress holding an interest of the character I have described. The land grant was granted to the State of Arkansas and not to the railroad company, and that the company that I am interested in, and the company in the State, and to the State the company is answerable, and not to the company. I never purchased the bonds until after the passage of Congress, and I never purchased them at any time at a price or without from the public a previous notice in legislation.

"In the seven intervening years since Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds were placed upon the market I have never purchased a single one of them, nor offered to purchase, nor have I ever heard of any person who I believe to be interested in that fine land grant, or in the Little Rock and Fort Smith railroad land grant, ever offered to purchase or propose to purchase, or even to mention the matter to me. I have not the slightest interest in the Little Rock and Fort Smith railroad land grant, or in the land grant in the State, which is granted to Congress, and I have never had any interest in it. I have never had any HICKS PASHA.

A Brief Record of an Exceedingly Eventful Career.

The name of Hicks Pasha figuring so often in the dispatches from Egypt has become a familiar one and his massacre a short time ago caused many inquiries as to his identity, it being known that he was not a native of the land he died in. It has often been said that he was an American, and the Fort Wayne Gazette gave a long account of the career of this remarkable man. It is stated that Hicks Pasha is and was none other than one C. Carroll Hicks, who was "everything by turns and nothing long"—actor, soldier, lawyer, and business man. In 1865 he visited Fort Wayne with a theatrical troupe, in which his wife appeared as "Marjorie." A long and disastrous experience of hard-storming enlisted there, and most of the members had to count thes back to the confines of a country where talent was appreciated. Hicks and his wife settled in Fort Wayne and there his history became known. And it was a "strange, eventful history." Graduating from the United States naval academy, he worked at odd things, and when the war broke out was in the service of the Spanish and Persian governments.

He took sides with the confederacy in the struggle, being a South Carolinian by birth. He was commissioned to the naval service of the confederacy, and made things lively for union craft upon the high seas. In one expedition he failed and was captured and taken to port. At Brooklyn he was tried for piracy and sentenced to be hanged. It was decided, however, about that time that, according to the law of nations, the confederate privateers were not pirates and the sentence was revoked. Then he started on his theatrical career.

When the company landed in Fort Wayne, and the utmost endeavors on the part of the treasurer would not make the ghost walk, he met Mr. F. A. C. MacManus, who was then city editor of the Gazette, but who is now a lawyer in this city and a lively member of the house of delegates. They started a law office, but after some experience found that young lawyers without incomes could not stand the strain of looking for clients who never came, and at last their rusty shingle tumbled down, and the firm dissolved by mutual consent and the force of circumstances.

He then procured employment as a traveling salesman, and made a success as one of the most innocent men in the world. He violated all his previous principles and saved money, and then started with his wife for New York. He went to Spain, leaving his wife behind him in America, and in the Cuban troubles carried himself with honors in the Spanish army. Then he entered the service of Turkey and went through the Turco-Russian war without gaining any titles. Returning to New York, he remained but a short time, and then proceeded to Egypt, where he remained ever since, and where he received the title of pasha—one of importance and honor.

Mr. F. A. C. MacManus was sitting in his chair, the other evening, when a reporter called on him and asked him what he knew of Hicks Pasha.

The story as given above was told Mr. MacManus, and he seemed at first rather surprised. He said:

"Of course I can say as to the literal truth that C. Carroll Hicks, of Fort Wayne, my old partner, is identical with Hicks Pasha, but I would not be in the least surprised if the account should prove true. He was a talented fellow, of good appearance and graceful carriage, and his chief propensity was to adventure."

"Are the facts as stated concerning his career true?"

"No. The paper is in error in giving Hicks' birthplace as North Carolina. He was born in Georgia. He was one of the most agreeable conversationalists I ever met—in fact, a real high-toned southern gentleman in every sense of the word. There are some details of his history which are not given. He was with Garibaldi in Italy, and followed Walker in his expedition. I could tell you a hundred tales of his career which would make interesting reading, but I have no time."—St. Louis Republican.

Libraries.

The National Library may indeed be called the great brain bottle of the American people. But the bottle is already too full. The library was made to accommodate 200,000 volumes, and there are already 513,441 books piled in it one above another, and over 170,000 pamphlets are stored away in the crypts. After the work on the new building is commenced, says Architect Smithmyer, it will require five years to complete it, and in that time at the present rate of increase our National Library will have approximated a million of volumes. Added as it is by the copyright tax it will always be the largest and best library in the United States, and it will soon compete with those of Europe. There are now five bigger libraries in the world, viz.: The national library of France, with 2,300,000 volumes; the Library of the British Museum at London, 1,550,000; the Royal Public Library at St. Petersburg, 1,600,000, and the Royal Library at Berlin, 750,000.

The first library in the United States was the Harvard College library started in 1638, while that of Yale College was started in A. D. 1700. Thirty-one years later Ben Franklin, having walked from New York to Philadelphia and started a printing office there, originated the first subscription library of America, and in 1800, when our Capitol was removed to Washington, the Library of Congress or our National Library was founded. When the British came here in 1814, they burned it and Congress bought Jefferson's library of 7,000 volumes as a second beginning. By 1851 the library had increased to 55,000 volumes, when it was again destroyed by fire, only 20,000 volumes being saved. Since that time the library has steadily grown, having nearly doubled in size within the past ten years.

In 1870 there were estimated to be 50,000,000 books in the libraries of the United States and 20,000,000 of these were in public libraries. This gives 55 average of over one book per person, as there were 38,000,000 people in the United States by the same census.

The German nations have the most books in their libraries, and there are over a thousand public libraries in Germany, Austria and Switzerland, twenty of which contain over 100,000 volumes. Great Britain has only nine libraries containing over 100,000 volumes, but the British Museum pays out $80,000 annually to improve its collection. France has six libraries of over 100,000 bound volumes of the National Library, which is the largest in the world, and Spain has all told, thirty public libraries containing in all 700,000 volumes, of which 223,000 are in the library at Madrid.—Cleveland Leader.

America Criticised.

An English writer in the London World thus gives his view of the aspect of life in the United States: What is simply the plutocratic spirit here becomes the blind devotion to Mammon there. In England wealth goes for a good deal. In America Wordsworth's line, "The wealthiest man among us is the best," is literally true. In London are tolerably fixed ideas of display, but the splendor of Belgravia or Mayfair is completely eclipsed by the aggressively ostentatious prodigality of New York. The life of American towns of any pretensions is infected by the most flagrant vices, while it may present some of the idiosyncratic merits of old and new civilizations. Corruption and magnificence go hand in hand. Side by side with moral depravity there is a glittering and shameless sensuism, a boundless profusion and as illimitable squalidy. Imagine the mingled horror and contempt with which the simple, God-fearing Washington would have gazed upon the group of carpet-baggers, speculators, libertines, lobbyists, millionaires, who are the chief personages in American society to-day. Washington was the father of American independence, and in this sense the father of a great nation but he may also be said to have laid the foundation-stone of a vast human hot-house. He could not foresee the vast rapidity of growth which would mark the stock it contains—the more than tropical luxuriance of the foliage, the monstrous dimensions to which scaliness and unsemilinss, beauty and deformity, vice and virtue, would both be carried. Libya, writes Tacitus, is always producing something new. What Africa was in the days of the historian, America is now. It is the region of portents and prodigies, of big booms and gigantic frauds, of "fringe" of terrific girth, and of motives and actions of extraordinary littleness; of incomes exceeding the dreams of Asiatic potentates, and of vice and misery unspeakable; of monstrous births, two-headed nightingales, appalling twins, giants, pigmies, bearded woman, and all of the other abominations which can claim kindred with humanity.

The polite and travelled American, as we meet with him in the best society of London or Paris, is a simpering dandy or an effete buck. He is a collector of artistic gems, of bric-a-brac, of pictures; he affects an inordinate love of Venice; he writes the dainty English of the new aesthetic school; he finds Thackeray and Dickens too full-flavored to suit his taste; and—as the weak-headed academic exquisite, leaves a sigh of disgust at the very idea of common-sense port, and can drink only the lightest of Rhenish wine, largely tempered by Apollinaris—he protests feebly that the purity of his taste is such that he can only tolerate Mr. Henry James or Mr. W. D. Howells. His mincing manner reproduces the limnities and inflections of all the countries of which he has had experience. His twang is his own; his bearing and pressure are a compromise between the Paris mascadin and the London masher. Yet, though he may devote his existence to wandering over the European world, he is seldom able to divest himself of an innate provincialism.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

Ninth District Congressman.

Last Wednesday, Sept. 10th, the conventions of the democrats, greenbackers and labor party were held at Ludington, to nominate candidates for congress. The democrats invited both of the other parties to a joint convention, and after many conferences and arrangement of details, a joint convention was held, with H. J. Hoyt, of Muskegon, as chairman, the agreement being that three quarters of the total vote should nominate and each party should cast the same number of votes. The first two ballots brought out a dozen candidates representing every conceivable idea and ism. L. G. Mason, of Muskegon, and J. B. Goodsell, of Ludington, were the leading candidates. A protonged struggle seemed inevitable, and at midnight Judge S. S. Fallas, of Wexford county, was brought forward as a dark horse. It succeeded, and on the second ballot after he was presented he received more than the three-quarters vote, and was declared the unanimous choice of the convention.

Judge Fallas, who lives in Cadillac was elected prosecuting attorney of Wexford county, in 1872, and in April, 1882, was appointed judge of the twenty-eighth circuit (comprising the counties of Kalkaska, Missaukee, Roscommon and Wexford) by Governor Jerome. He was unanimously nominated for his own successor by the bar of the circuit, and in November, 1882, he was elected by 628 majority over the republican candidate. The counties in the circuit gave a majority of 400 for Governor Jerome. Judge Fallas' own county gave him a majority of 712, although it gave an average republican majority of over 300.

The counties comprising the ninth congressional district of Michigan in 1880 gave Garfield a majority of 4,700 over both Hancock and Weaver combined. But in no section of the state was there greater political revolution during the next two years than that which occurred in the ninth district. It is true that Cutcheon carried it for congress by a majority of 2,632; but Begole had a majority over Jerome at the same election of 266 in a total vote in the district, which was but a few hundred smaller than that cast at the presidential election. Again in 1883, in an unusually heavy vote for a spring election, there was a republican plurality in the district on the vote for justice of the supreme court of less than 400, and the republicans were in an absolute minority in the district of upwards of 1,200, the prohibition vote being heavy.

Republican Prospects.

The republicans in Michigan have fallen upon h

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

The Rev. James Wesley, a Methodist pastor, was killed while walking on the track between Fairfield and Southport, Conn.

Legacies amounting to $250,000 were left by the late Susan Anthony to his sister and other relatives. He left $25,000 for public purposes.

Forty thousand people attended the funeral of the late Secretary Folger, at Geneva, N. Y. President Arthur, Secretary Chandler, Postmaster General Dickson were present. The ceremonies were very impressive.

Miss Stanlizy, of Fort Plain, N. Y., has fasted 10 days and still refuses to partake of food. A physician says that she has a method in deception.

The authorities of Philadelphia have notified the telegraph and telephone companies that all wires must be placed underground by the end of the year.

Miss Victoria Moreoni, daughter of Jay Gould's financial adviser and broker, tried two chances with Ernest Schelling, a young gentleman, whom her father had discharged.

A bottle of vermin exploded in Cragin's Japan works, in Brooklyn, by which one man was blinded in a eye and four others received total injuries.

Ernest Schelling, the coachman, who eloped with the daughter of Jay Gould's private secretary, is now found to be an impecunious German gentleman.

The State Bank at Fort Edward, N. Y., has closed its doors. The officers say that depositors will be paid in full as soon as the accounts are examined and adjusted.

WESTERN.

It is reported that pleuro-pneumonia has made its appearance at Ouray, Wis.

Julius B. Fredericks, one of the sergeants in the Greely expedition, is at Indianapolis. He denies that there were two factions in the expedition; says he has no knowledge of any cannibalism and, in speaking of Henry's execution, says he was shot by orders while in the act of sending signals.

A disease, the nature of which is not known, has broken out among the cattle of Tulsa, near Huron, Dak. Some deaths have resulted. It is thought by many that the cattle have eaten poisonous weeds.

At Denver, Rust, Harris & Co., who sell and retail hardware and stoves, and U. J. Hutton & Co., wholesale glass and house goods, fail in sentiment.

Fifty thousand school-children attended the Illinois State Fair at Chicago on the opening day.

A serious conflagration was started in the state in Cleveland, Ohio, by ignition from a tar heater in a pile of shingles in the money yard of Weeks, Perry & Co. Ten acres covered with lumber or frame buildings were in flames simultaneously. The Variety Iron Works and the varnish factory of Sherwin, Williams & Co. were among the early victims. Engines were summoned from Erie, Toledo, and the nearest Ohio towns. The loss is about $2,000,000.

In the Little Rocky Mountains, 100 miles from Benton, M. T., gold has been discovered, and people are flocking to the new diggings in great numbers. Three hundred dollars has been taken from a pit twenty feet square.

In the tobacco growing belt of Wisconsin the crop has been harvested, and to a fair quality of the "weed" was never before raised.

The Chippewa River rose twenty feet in a few hours. Five engines and a number of boilings at Chippewa Falls, Wis., were swept away, causing a loss of $100,000.

By the explosion of the cookers in Doheny & Spellman's distillery at Peoria, Ill., the whole building was wrecked. Three men were killed outright and a fourth was fatally injured.

The proposition of the Chicago Live Stock Exchange to practically demonstrate whether pleuro-pneumonia is contagious or not, by supplying the head of healthy cattle and guaranteeing the expense of exposing them to the contagion said to exist among certain Illinois herds, was heartily endorsed by the Omaha Live Stock Exchange.

Jacob Stein, Postmaster at Reno, Iowa, shot and almost instantly killed his wife and then fatally shot himself. He is supposed to have been insane.

The silver-keepers of Youngstown, Ohio, divided one of their number to keep open all night and submit to arrest. Money has already been raised to carry the case to the Supreme Court.

Near Dalavan, Wis., Albert B. Tapping and Winifred C. Savery, while out rifle shooting, were instantly killed as a railroad crossing. The young people were engaged to be married.

SOUTHERN.

Mrs. Harlan, wife of ex-Senator James Harlan, of Iowa, and mother-in-law of Secretary Lincoln, died at Fortress Monroe, Va.

Two market-houses and a number of small buildings at Gallatin, N. C., were burned, with $40,000 loss.

In New Orleans the other night Claud Thayer assisted Ben O'Neil, an attache of a paper called the Mascot, O'Neil fired five times at his opponent, a woman in the crowd fainting from fright. She Writes a Letter Accepting the Presidential Nomination of the Woman's Rights Party.

Marietta L. Stone, President; Ella C. Weld, Secretary; and members of the Woman's Suffrage Equal Rights party:

Having been duly notified of your action in nominating me as candidate for the high position of Chief Magistrate of the United States, I hereby accept the Equal Rights party, and although feeling unworthy and inexperienced to fill such a place, I am constrained to accept the nomination so generously and enthusiastically tendered. Your platform, which I have read and truly represents the views and wishes of our whole party, North and South, East and West, I believe that will lead our nation to a more perfect union in fact, and secure to the fairest and most prosperous land the blessings and justice of a free election, but to guide the ship of state safely and wisely, we need the helm in the hands of women as well as men. If I am not one to be elected, and should our party, with its noble platform of principles, be successful in the contemplated election, it will be my earnest effort to promote and maintain equal rights and privileges for every class of our citizens, from the Chinese in our Pacific States to the negro of the great and glorious south, in truth what it was so long been in name, the land of the free and the home of the brave. I shall seek to insure a fair distribution of the public offices among the people, so that no occupation either industrial or professional, women are daily insulted and injured, shall be left without representation in the nation's councils. I shall also support the abolishment of the pension office, to compel equal and just treatment of the soldiers, and to abolish the pension system, which is a premium on vice and a bounty on crime. I am opposed to monopolies in the hands of a few, and in favor of the rights and rewards of labor. I believe in the right of women to vote, and have no fear but that the intelligent women of the country, both individual private, if it be in need of money, that you make possible the large number of trust with government officials, caused back payments to be made to the government treasury. It has succeeded and footed sinks, and I believe it will be in the power of the judiciary of the country of some cases, if elected, I shall feel it incumbent on me to appoint a considerable number of women as Judges, Attorneys, Marshals, and Judges of the United States, and would appoint any competent woman to any vacancy that might occur in the Supreme Court of the United States, and the lower courts, especially the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, I would use the veto power to insure a fair distribution of the public offices among the people, so that no occupation either industrial or professional, women are daily insulted and injured, shall remain without representation in the nation's councils. I shall also support the abolishment of the pension office, to compel equal and just treatment of the soldiers, and to abolish the pension system, which is a premium on vice and a bounty on crime. WISCONSIN PROHIBITIONISTS.

They Assemble in Convention and Nominate a Full State Ticket.

The Wisconsin Prohibition State Convention met in the Assembly Chamber at Madison, and was called to order by E. Giles, Chairman of the State Central Committee, John A. Bingham, Secretary, selected temporary Chairman. The latter made a lengthy speech, pointing out the Republican party for not submitting a prohibition amendment, and for allowing the importance people on the growth of the party in Wisconsin. H. F. Fraser of Madison, Charles Carlson of Eau Claire, and Henry Sanford of Manitowoc were elected Secretaries. The district delegates reported their representatives on the various committees and the nominees for the ticket.

The following committees for State officers were made:

Governor—S. D. Hastings, of Eau Claire.

Lieutenant Governor—A. A. Kelly, of St. Croix.

Secretary of State—E. G. Durant, of Berlin.

State Treasurer—C. D. Shelman, of Wauwatosa.

Attorney General—F. M. Angel, of Barron.

Superintendent of Public Instruction—Robert Graham, of Winnebago.

Railroad Commissioner—Henry Sanford, of Manitowoc.

Insurance Commissioner—Nelson Lake, of Lafayette.

A full electoral ticket and a State Central Committee were appointed. The sum of $1,100 was collected from the delegates for campaign purposes. The platform adopted indorses the nominees and platform of the Pittsburgh convention; demands the abolishment of the pension office, the commission system, and amendment; that no money that was paid for the purchase of trust with government officials, caused back payments to be made to the government treasury. It has succeeded and footed sinks, and I believe it will be in the power of the judiciary of the country of some cases, if elected, I shall feel it incumbent on me to appoint a considerable number of women as Judges, Attorneys, Marshals, and Judges of the United States, and would appoint any competent woman to any vacancy that might occur in the Supreme Court of the United States, and the lower courts, especially the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, I would use the veto power to insure a fair distribution of the public offices among the people, so that no occupation either industrial or professional, women are daily insulted and injured, shall remain without representation in the nation's councils. Greenback Senatorial Convention.

A greenback senatorial convention, to nominate a candidate for state senator for the 29th senatorial district, will be held at Traverse City, at one o'clock p. m., Wednesday, October 8, 1884. The several counties in the district are requested to send delegates as follows: Antrim, 3; Benzie, 2; Charlevoix, 3; Emmet, 3; Grand Traverse, 8; Kalkaska, 2; Leelanaw, 2; Missaukee, 1; Manitou, 2.

H. M. NEWTON, Chairman.

Gen. Cutcheon's Speech.

At the opera house last night, Gen. B. M. Cutcheon, republican candidate for congress for this district, undertook to bring back into the ranks those who have wandered away from the old party. He pronounced a eulogy on the life of Gen. Butler, at the same time counting him out of the control by charging that every vote cast for him is a vote for Grover Cleveland. The fusion ticket in this state is a thorn in republican flesh, and every move throws it deeper. On the basis of that combination every vote for Butler counts in the proportion of electors. Butler is a grand, good man, but in the opinion of the speaker is only Cleveland's assistant.

Prohibitionists were exhorted not to divide their strength. There are enough in the state to make a respectable party, if united but divided can only defeat themselves. They, too, are a thorn when they evince a determination to support principle and not a party that has repeatedly betrayed them.

The lives of Blaine and Cleveland were compared from the republican standpoint, of course omitting those features of Blaine's public career which have made him obnoxious. Not a word was said about that little enterprise in which Mr. Blaine promised to and he is a denizen, and where by the use of his influence as speaker he was made rich.

Cleveland's public record is irreproachable. An effort was made to prejudice the G. A. R. and workingmen, by mentioning the mayor's veto of the $300 appropriation, and the five-cent fare bill. But he neglected to state that these vetoes were on constitutional grounds. In the case of the $300, although Cleveland vetoed the ordinance, he approved the object as worthy, and contributed fifty dollars from his own purse toward the expense of the ceremonies. The speaker conveniently forgot why certain other bills in the interest of workingmen were vetoed. The legislature which passed these bills was republican, and the bills not signed were so carelessly drawn as to be practically inoperative as law, without time to return them for correction and completion. No mention was made of the democratic bills Gov. Cleveland did sign for the benefit of workingmen. We shall give an extract from Gov. Cleveland's labor record next week.

The candidates for vice president received similar comparison.

Free trade was another choice topic, and yet the picture of pauperism in free trade England which he reproduced from Mr. Porter, can be duplicated in almost every protected American city of fifty thousand population, if one cares to see it. His theory of American competition and low prices is very plausible, but practically does not explain the frequent stoppage of these protected industries, and consequent throwing out of employment of thousands of skilled mechanics.

The Bargain Blaine Broke.

Every man in Maine was called upon last Monday to vote for or against the prohibition amendment to the constitution. Citizen Blaine was pledged to vote for it, in return for which prohibitionists were to vote the regular republican state ticket. At the close of the day, after nearly all the votes had been polled, Mr. Blaine quietly emptied himself upon the ground that being a great national character he could not be expected to take sides on a mere local issue! What cowardice.—New York World.

Notes and News.

Manistee is building a rink 61x125 feet.

Manistee is to have a $12,000 school house.

Nine new brick stores are in process of erection at Manistee.

In Muskegon county the greenbackers are "fusing" with the republicans on portions of the county ticket.

Fusion of democrats and greenbackers is a terrible thing in the republican mind, but fusion of republicans and prohibitionists is no sacrifice at all. Oh, no! Republicans have been prohibitionists, lo, these many years,—in their platforms only.

The democratic congressional committee for this district was appointed last Wednesday as follows: Wm. E. Nisbett, Big Rapids; H. J. Hoyt, Muskegon; S. B. Goodsell, Ludington; L. E. Morris, Manistee; D. E. Soper, Newaygo; J. R. Savage, Muscelona.

A Manistee dispatch says the unanimous nomination of Judge Silas S. Fallas, of Cadillac, for congress at Ludington, on the 10th by the workingmen, greenbackers and democrats in joint convention gives universal satisfaction there, where the judge is well known. It completely takes the wind from the sails of the republicans and is deemed a great victory, owing to the fact that the republican managers attempted to prevent a fusion of the conventions.

Hon. W. C. Edsell, of Otsego, Allegan county, a life-long republican, has deserted that party and accepted the prohibition nomination for congress in the fifth district. He has been in the legislature two terms as a republican, and was a member of the convention that organized the republican party "under the oaks" at Jackson. His service as a republican legislator was in the state senate in '77, '79 and '81-2, where he was considered a stalwart member of the party, with radical temperance ideas.

The republican party of to-day is not the republican party that existed when Lincoln was president. As Grant and his bodyguard came, the republican party began to fade away till now there is left but a name and a party machine managed by aged schemers and enemies of industry as they are robbers of the same. The democratic party of to-day is not the democratic party of '72 and '76, but a broader, better, more thoroughly so-called party into which are coming tens of thousands of independent, honest republicans; tens of thousands of greenback men; tens of thousands of men who in the future will work to perfect good principles and advance those ideas which will bring the greatest good to the greatest numbers.

The Nashville Students will visit Charlevoix Sept. 30th, under the auspices of Butler post, G. A. R. Tickets will be for sale by the members of the post, and reserved seats at Bridge street house.

J. J. Rensdell, of East Jordan, has shifted a tan wagon, with bondsmen's name on it, from Charlevoix to Boyne City. With an entire new outfit and tried to induce Capt. Vanderhoef to run between Petoskey and Manistique, calling at St. James with the mail. The aim was apparently to make Petoskey a wholesale center, but really to prevent the boat coming to Charlevoix with the hundreds of excursionists which she would carry. As to driving off the Hannah, Lay & Co. boats, we don't believe it. It is unfortunate for them that they have built up the business here, and it is also true that they have tried to drive every competing boat from these lakes. Their fight with the Northern Line boats from Chicago is proof of this, if we have been correctly informed. The wholesale trade of Hannah, Lay & Co., is too large to sacrifice by the withdrawal of their own boats. If they do withdraw, there are doubtless other boats ready to take the business. Petoskey is jealous of Charlevoix, and dislikes very much to see her resorters come here for any purpose. Too many of them at once signify an intention to make their headquarters here next season and this is just what the Record seeks to prevent. Looking at it in this light, it is to the interest of Charlevoix to keep the Friant or some equally good boat on the line. However, we are assured by Capt. Vanderhoef that not only will the Friant run here next season, but no other like her will be put on the same line, if necessary to do the business.

Two Picnics.

Last Thursday, the Kentuckians of Ironton went to Holy Island, with all the etceteras of a basket picnic. In addition to the necessary seats and tables, a platform for dancing had been erected, music provided, and this pleasure continued nearly all day. Altogether the day was so successful that another picnic under the same auspices is announced for to morrow, the 19th.

On Friday, 12th, a party of about 75 from Charlevoix, went to the same place on the same errand, and of course had an excellent time.

Business engagements prevented our attendance on either day, therefore details are omitted.

Coi. Wisner is making the island an excellent place for picnics, and its popularity another season is already assured. It is his aim to convert it into a resort, and to this end a dock and cottages are contemplated for next season.

Advertise in the Journal.

E. A. Berdan, with the Detroit Free Press, has been visiting his parents in Charlevoix the past week. This is his first visit here, and he seems to have thoroughly enjoyed it, and taken with him an excellent impression of our village.

The Eastport correspondent of the Bellaire Breeze says: "Marion Bence has removed his household goods from Charlevoix and intends making this his future home. Mr. Bence is a first-rate carpenter, as his work on the new hotel shows."

Dr. Carlstein reports that Mrs. G. White, from whom a tumor was removed, as reported last week, is doing well. The incision is healing rapidly, and unless something unlooked for prevents, her recovery will be speedy and certain.

There is a movement on foot whereby Harbor Springs will be made the terminus of a large line of steamers. Also, a business enterprise built up there that will bring in a large amount of outside capital. One Chicago man alone offers to take a $10,000 interest we are informed.—Republican.

Three hundred people went on an excursion from Boyne to Harbor Springs, on the Friant, last Saturday. The Statesman says: "It was so satisfactorily a success that another will be given on the same boat to Beaver Island one week from next Saturday. The Friant is a good, fast boat, and her crew kind and obliging, making the trip an enjoyable one."

The steam barge Henry Howard, which left Detroit last Wednesday, bound up, was burned two miles below Alpena last night, being entirely consumed. She had the barge George Worthington in tow, which was more or less damaged. The Howard was owned by E. House and Julia Miner (wife of Capt. John Miner) each holding an equal interest. She was built at Port Huron in 1867, was of 291 tons burden, and valued in Lloyd's register at $12,000; insurance $7,500.

A huge rock or agate, as some persist in calling it, weighing about 2,500 lbs., was delivered to Mr. Wolcott at Harbor Point one day last week, by S. L. Barber. This rock was taken out of the water on the beach about four miles from Harbor Springs and brought to town on a wagon, drawn by a span of horses and a yoke of oxen. Mr. Wolcott first discovered it about five years ago, and has been keeping an eye on it ever since. It now stands in front of his cottage, where everybody can see it free of charge. Like Joseph's coat, this stone is "made up of many colors" and Mr. W. feels proud of it.—Republican.

"Last Wednesday the suit of P. A. Badour, publisher of the Statesman, against J. A. Bacot of Hortons Bay, in which the latter was sued for subscription amounting to $5.25, came off before justice Hill, who rendered judgment to the full amount. Bacot claimed he never subscribed for the paper, yet he took it from the office, read it and never notified the publisher that he did not wish to take it. He utterly refused to pay one cent of the debt before trial, but afterwards had to pay the principal with costs, amounting in all to nearly $10. There are others who will be in the same fix if they don't pay up pretty soon. We have got done fooling."—Boyne Statesman. We are sending the JOURNAL to several who have not personally subscribed, but on the recommendation of their friends. If all such who do not want it will notify us to that effect at once, their paper will not be forced on them. All who do not so notify us will be considered from life subscribers, and payment will be expected from them.

Honors to Charlevoix.

At the annual meeting of the Michigan pharmaceutical association, held in Detroit last week, Dr. G. W. Carter, of Charlevoix was elected president. The importance of this position will be better understood when it is known that the association is composed of about 450 of the most intelligent and successful business men of the state. Speaking of the association, the Detroit Post says: "It would be no easy task to find 450 men associated for a purpose and engaged in the same line of trade, who possess more intelligence or are more business like in appearance than are the members of the state pharmaceutical association." And yet Charlevoix furnishes the man who comes to the top.

Jealousy vs. Competition.

The Petoskey Record utters a growl against the steamer Thomas Friant, which savors more of jealousy of Charlevoix than anything else. When the Friant first came here, the editor of the Record said all he could to prevent her running to Charlevoix, and tried to induce Capt. Vanderhoef to run between Petoskey and Manistique, calling at St. James with the mail. The aim was apparently to make Petoskey a wholesale center, but really to prevent the boat coming to Charlevoix with the hundreds of excursionists which she would carry. As to driving off the Hannah, Lay & Co. boats, we don't believe it. It is unfortunate for them that they have built up the business here, and it is also true that they have tried to drive every competing boat from these lakes. Their fight with the Northern Line boats from Chicago is proof of this, if we have been correctly informed. The wholesale trade of Hannah, Lay & Co., is too large to sacrifice by the withdrawal of their own boats. If they do withdraw, there are doubtless other boats ready to take the business. Petoskey is jealous of Charlevoix, and dislikes very much to see her resorters come here for any purpose. Too many of them at once signify an intention to make their headquarters here next season and this is just what the Record seeks to prevent. Looking at it in this light, it is to the interest of Charlevoix to keep the Friant or some equally good boat on the line. However, we are assured by Capt. Vanderhoef that not only will the Friant run here next season, but no other like her will be put on the same line, if necessary to do the business.

GOV. HENDRICKS.

The Next Vice-President on the Political Issues of the Day.

Cogent Reasons Why There Ought to Be a Change in the Control of Public Affairs.

One hundred campaign speeches were delivered on Saturday, Aug. 30, in Indiana cities, but which cities it will require the newspapers to tell us. Thomas A. Hendricks addressed a vast open air meeting at Indianapolis. He said:

Fellow-citizens, I appreciate the privilege and the duty of speaking to you at this time. I appreciate the duty of speaking frankly and without concealment or exaggeration of any material fact or opinion. May I first ask your attention to the necessity and importance of reverse reform? The power to levy and collect taxes is among the highest and most responsible of the attributes of government. It touches the property, the rights and liberty of taking private property for public use, and with the right and power of transferring the citizen into the service, perilous life to the duties and hazards of war. It takes from a man that which he has a right to retain for his public use. It takes upon compulsion the money which he has earned in the exchanges of capital. To do over man the power of a power of taxation, and the money is of public consequence, how far may government go? It is the exercise of the power in the people. Every man who pays a tax, with a right to vote, is a limitation not certainly, but with the absolute limitation not certainly, but with the absolute limitation upon the exercise of public authority, with all of the sacrifices and burdens imposed upon. Whatever the Government can lawfully do, and of right should do, the people must furnish the means to accomplish. Beyond this the government can not go. Beyond this it is usurpation. The Government is supported by the people and is supported. Are you sure from the foregoing, the fundamental principle, that any other rule should be adopted? May we take your money for such and such purposes by the Constitution, or not for the public welfare? Shall we take it for purposes which are not public? Shall we take it for purposes of power, and the money is of public consequence, how far may government go? It is the exercise of the power in the people. Every man who pays a tax, with a right to vote, is a limitation not certainly, but with the absolute limitation upon the exercise of public authority, with all of the sacrifices and burdens imposed upon. Whatever the Government can lawfully do, and of right should do, the people must furnish the means to accomplish. Beyond this the government can not go. Beyond this it is usurpation. The Government is supported by the people and is supported. Are you sure from the foregoing, the fundamental principle, that any other rule should be adopted? May we take your money for such and such purposes by the Constitution, or not for the public welfare? Shall we take it for purposes which are not public? May

Mr. Peter Kane raised 87 bushels of oats from one acre this year.

Blaine's majority in Hayes will be best represented thusly: ,000,000.

The farmers in Hayes have commenced sowing their winter wheat.

Miss Adelaide Lewis left Monday for Olivet college, to be absent three years.

The Sentinel is rather soon in its assertion about certain citizens of Hayes voting for Blaine.

There is to be a meeting of the school board at Gibson school house Thursday, Sept. 18th, to hear petition for the formation of a new school district.

Some of the gallant Haywites want to be a little more particular when they are waiting upon other men's wives, especially when they assist them to alight from their carriages.

Tin wedding—Mr. and Mrs. Frank and Ella Kane, celebrated the tenth anniversary of their married life, Sept. 25th, and all who were present had a most enjoyable time. Owing to the almost continuous rain, but few of their many friends were present.

There was quite a large gathering at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. I. S. Webster, Sept. 7th, to witness the marriage of their daughter, Miss Lottie, to Morell Long, of Evangeline. The ceremony was performed by Rev. C. F. Van Aitken. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Robert Miller and several other friends from the Bridge street house, who in token of their esteem presented the bride with a nice set of dishes, which, with the presents from other friends made a fine array.

South Arm.

Freeman Wilson has a young heir.

Mr. Green and sister, Mrs. Covey, spent last week at Central Lake with relatives.

Rev. Richard Tyndall has gone to Lansing to attend the M. E. conference convened there.

S. G. Isaman who has the contract for making the new state road, is pushing it forward rapidly.

Prayer meeting on Thursday evening was well attended, and a lively interest shown by those present.

Mr. S. Fisher, a traveling Jew from Traverse City, spent Saturday and Sunday at J. R. Vance's recently.

Messrs. Hipp, Lanway and Thomson have their new threshing machine in running order and are now doing good business.

Elder Blake spent Sunday, Sept. 7, at Ironton, and preached in East Jordan on Sept. 14, while Elder Sparks occupied the pulpit in the evening.

At the annual school meeting, H. B. Stoddard was chosen his own successor, as assessor of their district; also permission given the church-going people to procure a key for their use, which privilege has been gladly availed of.

Now is the time when the festive fly flesh (yes, even lightedly), while the resorter sweareth, the small (?) boy batheth, the threshing machine loometh, the economical earnesteth, and all nature rejoiceth in the beautiful sun that shineth.

Ironton.

The steam barge will start out this week. The captain expected on Monday.

Business in Ironton has started up. A load of iron ore came in Friday, the vessel will take back a load of pig iron.

Mr. C. H. Webster has been employed to teach the Ironton school, as principal. School will commence the first of October.

As to the loyal republicans of Ironton; he was caught in one bottle, and had his arms taken from him, and paroled and bound not to take up arms again. He has proved loyal in that.

The editor of the Sentinel feels very bad over the two noisy democrats of Ironton, and well he may, for republican county officers will be as scarce as lions teeth, this fall in Charlevoix.

A STRANGE VISITOR.

She was such a dainty little old lady, with her sad, delicate, haughty face, her snow-white hair, her black glass-ing eyes, bright as stars.

The child was a mere baby, not more than three or four years old. She had on a white frock and tiny scarlet shoes, but wore neither caps nor hat.

Madame Van Dyck started violently at sight of her standing there so suddenly, so if she might have dropped from the ceiling. Then she said softly:

"Who are you, little one? Where have you come from?"

The baby eyes met madame's fearlessly.

"I'ease, I's Dada," she said gravely, pushing a cloud of yellow curls off her face with both hands.

Madame's cold eyes softened. She almost smiled as she extended her white and jewelled hand, saying gently:

"Come and kiss me, darling."

The little one hovered on tiptoe a moment, half turned away, like a bird poising for flight, and then as the lady took a step toward her, darted off, as if winged really.

Madame followed quickly, but by the time she reached the door her small visitor had vanished, and though she summoned her servants and caused instant and thorough search to be made, the child could not be found.

A day or two after the stately lady was in her conservatory.

Suddenly, from somewhere near, sounded a childish voice.

"I'll tiss oo now if oo'll dive I some fowers."

Turning quickly, madame saw a cherub head parting the branching leaves of a tall white lily just beside her.

She had not heard a sound till then, and there was the strange child again.

Madame put her hand to her side.

"Oh," she murmured, in an accent of mingled pain and fright, "it is Laura's face over again—Laura's very face."

The child stood still, looking at her with her lovely shining eyes, her small hands fluttering like the two wings of a bird.

Suddenly madame caught her in her arms and kissed her with such fervor, and hugged her so tightly, that the little child cried out shrinkly:

"Dada 'fraid. Put Dada down this moment."

But she did not cry, as Madame Van Dyck noticed approvingly.

"Won't you run away again if I put you down?"

"Put Dada down," repeated the child imperiously.

Madame obeyed, laughing as she had not done for years.

"Now, you small mystery," she said, as she set her upon her feet, "what next?"

The child held up the short skirt of her gaily embroidered dress in her woe fingers.

"Dada want fowers now. Dada want a bushel of fowers."

Madame proceeded at once to cut as nearly a bushel of her choicest blossoms as her tiny skirt would hold, taking whichever ones Dada herself ordered with the baby imperiousness of a thoroughly spoiled child.

"She is Laura over again—just Laura over again," madame kept repeating to herself, with lips that trembled a little. "I can't imagine where she comes from. But she ain't escape this time as she did before."

She was heading at this moment over a bed of violets, carefully culling the largest and sweetest. When she turned round, with her hands full, her small visitor was nowhere to be seen.

At first madame thought she must be hiding among the plants; but she could not find her. Then she went quickly to the nearest door—one opening into the parlors—and searched there thoroughly herself.

Afterwards she questioned the servants again; but as before, no one had seen any child—no one but madame.

Madame Van Dyck was the widow of a very rich man, whom she had married late in life without loving. Five years after, he died, leaving her all his property; for he had loved her.

There was one child—a little girl—whom madame adored with an absolute idolatry. The child was very lovely, very warm-hearted, very self-willed, and was never denied the smallest whim, except one.

She fell in love with a handsome young man when she was seventeen, and madame ordered him to leave her house, and never enter it again.

The end of it was that Laura Van Dyck, in a rash and angry moment, ran away with her lover, and married him.

The two had never met since.

"If she would only write and ask me to forgive her," the poor mother had thought in bitter pain, "I would do it. But she don't care for me anymore."

The proud, hurt woman never asked after her child; never sought to know whether she lived or died; but was her desertion had been to her you might read in her white hair. She was a miserable unhappy creature in all her pomp and stateliness.

Once more the mysterious child with the cherub head and birdlike voice and movement came to Madame Van Dyck.

She had been ill for several weeks, and was only now able to sit up. All through her sickness this thought of the child had haunted her; and partly because she could hear nothing of her, partly, perhaps, because she was sick and nervous, she began to have strange fancies about her.

"She was so like Laura when she was little," she thought, "and no one ever saw her but me. It was very strange."

And then, as madame sat there alone her door opened a little, and then a little more, and the child she was thinking of came softly into the room.

She was dressed in some kind of a pale blue fleecy material, which looked as if it might have been cut from a cloud in the sky, and her floating golden hair surrounded her head like a halo.

"Laura's face, Laura's dress that I keep locked in a drawer in this room. Oh, what can it mean?" madame muttered.

"Dada love oo," the child cooed, laying her velvet cheek against the cold fingers that were clutched upon the arm of madam's chair.

Madame Van Dyck suddenly leaned forward.

"In Heaven's name, who are you, child?" she cried out wildly.

That moment the door opened again, and a figure entered that was like a magnified Dada, face, dress, loving eyes and all.

"Laura!" screamed Madame Van Dyck. "Have you come back to me?"

"Oh, mother!" cried Laura, and then the two women were sobbing in each other's arms.

"I should have come before if I had thought you would let me," Laura said crying. "But you never answered any of my letters, and when you sent them back without even opening them, I did not dare to come myself."

"Letters!" exclaimed Madame Van Dyck. "I don't know what you mean. I have never had a line from you since you left me for that man."

"I wrote you several times. The letters were always returned unopened. I can show them to you."

Madame's housekeeper was summoned.

She turned white at sight of her mistress' daughter, and confessed to everything.

She had stopped the letters herself, and sent them back, thinking that she could render mistress with more impunity as long as she could keep her daughter from her.

"Mother," said Laura suddenly, "look at that child."

Dada had climbed upon a chair, taken out a handkerchief, exactly two inches and a half square, and was composedly and quietly crying all by herself.

"What are you crying about, dear?" asked her mother.

No answer.

"What is the matter, darling?" Laura asked again.

"Dada kying about dose letters too."

Madame Van Dyck laughed aloud.

Upon which the quaint little creature gravely put her handkerchief in her pocket again, got down from her seat, and began to laugh too.

"It is strange I never thought of her being your child, Laura," said madame. "She is so like you."

"So everyone says. I thought you would guess who she was at once, and I hoped the sight of her would soften your heart towards me. I brought her here myself. I had a key to that little door from the rose garden, and I knew the house so well I kept out of the servants' sight very easily. I have been in here a good many times since you have been sick. I watched my chance when you were asleep, and your nurse either asleep or out of the room. Once I got your keys, opened a drawer, and took out this little blue dress. I thought you would certainly guess who Dada was when you saw that on her. Her name is not Dada, you know. It is Hilda, after you. But that is the nearest she can come to saying it."

"You talked just like her when you were little. Where is that maid?"

"Now, mother, don't call him 'that man.' Fred is not very far away, you may be sure. We live only a few streets off. When may we come and see you?"

"At once. I forgive him everything on one condition. You are all to come and live here with me. I can't be separated from you again. And if he and I are each careful to mind our own business, we shall be a model mother and son-in-law."

His Expectations.

A Chicago man, who was induced to purchase a large interest in a hole in the ground in Nevada, said to certain silver, went to Virginia City to get some clue idea of how matters stood. A professional mine inspector was called in, and, after some talk, he said:

"My charges will be $50 a day, whether I discover anything or not."

"Suppose you discover that half of this mine is worth $100,000?"

"Then you will probably present me with $500."

"And if you should discover that I have paid $18,000 for a half interest in a hole which won't pan out $200—what then?"

"Why, I should then expect the man who sold it to you to present me with at least a thousand!"

John Coyne, of Denver, has ordered a gold-mounted collar for his dog. One night not long since Coyne's house took fire, and being a light affair, was being rapidly swallowed up. Being a heavy sleeper, he did not hear the crackling flames, and would soon have been cremated had not his dog burst his kennel open, rushed into his master's room, and scratched him in the face until he wakened up. So narrow was his escape that he had not even time to get his pocketbook from his pillow.

NOTICE OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE.—State of Michigan, County of Charlevoix, ss.

BENJAMIN WALKER, deceased.

Notice is hereby given, that in pursuance of an order granted to the undersigned, administrator of the estate of said deceased, by the Hon. Judge of Probate for the County of Charlevoix, on the 1st day of September, A. D. 1884, there will be sold at public vendue, to the highest bidder, at the Probate office in the village of Charlevoix, in the County of Charlevoix, in said State, on Friday, the TWENTY-SIXTH day of SEPTEMBER, A. D. 1884, at one o'clock in the afternoon of that day, subject to all encumbrances by mortgage or otherwise upon the premises, the real estate of said deceased, or at the time of sale, and also subject to the right of dower and the homestead rights of the widow of said deceased therein, the following described real estate, to wit: The south half of the northeast quarter of section twenty-eight (28), in township thirty-four (34) north, of range seven (7) west, containing eighty acres more or less, according to United States survey.

REUBEN WILLIS,
Administrator.

Cleveland's Labor Record.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill passed by a democratic legislature, to allow the people to express their opinion against the competition of convict with honest labor.

Governor Cleveland compelled the last republican legislature, much against its will, to pass a bill in accordance with the wishes of the people so emphatically expressed at the polls last fall, against the continuance of the prison contract system.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill to abolish contract child labor in all the state reformatories.

Governor Cleveland approved two bills against tenement house cigar manufacturings.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill making workingmen first creditors for wages in case of the failure of the employer or contractor.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill to protect hat makers from convict manufacture.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill to protect widows and orphans from swindling insurance corporations.

Governor Cleveland gave his signature to the emigration bill to protect emigrants from extortion and robbery.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill to prevent pawnbrokers from robbing the poor and unfortunate.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill for the better protection of those who place their earnings in the saving's bank.

Governor Cleveland signed the bill which provides for the testing of steam boilers, that laboring men might be better protected from accident resulting from the careless indifference of wealthy corporations.

Governor Cleveland asked the last republican legislature to appropriate sufficient funds to allow laboring men to continue work on the Capitol. This the republican legislature refused to do, preferring to squander the state funds on commissions and political investigating committees rather than for the benefit of workingmen.

Honor to them. In their weakness
They humbly bow to the sunset,
Asking help with the morning's freshness,
In our dear Redeemer's name.

Honor for so nobly striving
Though at first they half in awe
Gained the men who now are striving
In the work of death and sin.

For their cool unflinching bravery,
As they rescue men from Satan's thrall,
As they strive to expel out slavery
Vile poison Alcohol.

God grant that the time be hastened
When not even dear native land
Shall from this great curse be chastened
By this noble-hearted band!

Their fair hands shall conquer all,
For their fervent prayers shall answered be.
And soon this giant Alcohol,
Must leave this land of the noble free!

The Governental Liquor Traffic.

What is the governmental liquor business? It is the more than fourfifths interest of the government in all the spirits distilled in the country. For instance, whiskey is quoted at $1.10 per gallon to-day in the market reports. Of that sum the distiller gets twenty cents and the government ninety cents. It costs the distiller about fourteen cents to manufacture a gallon of whiskey, and it will be seen that his profit is less than 50 per cent. It costs the government about six cents per gallon to secure its fion's share of the price per gallon and it will also be seen that its profit is 1600 per cent. Considered as a partner, the government is a success. Its ability to dest[illegible] partnership rests upon its ability to abolish the business. The government holds the key of every distillery and distilling warehouse in the land. Every gallon of spirits manufactured in the country is made under the strict superintendence and by co-operation of the government. A man who would engage in the business must first bond over to the government his entire premises, land, buildings and appurtenances thereto. He must build the distillery in accordance with plans approved by the government and submit it to government control when built. The government weighs every bushel of his grain, and locks it up securely after the distiller has paid for it. The government measures it into the tub, knows how much of the manufactured article it will yield, and takes out its profits, not on the exact amount manufactured, but upon the capacity of the distillery. The government watches every step of the distilling process, draws off the finished product and stores it away under its own lock and seal until the distiller can find a customer who will pay both partners their profits and take away the goods. Even here the government steps in and says to the buyer, if he be a dealer in such merchandise, "Pay me $200 (if a rectifier of spirits), $150 (if a wholesale dealer), or $25 (if a retail dram seller), or I will seize your property and close out your business." It says to every illicit brewer, distiller, or saloon keeper in prohibitory states, "Pay me my profits, no matter what state laws may require." The governmental partnership in the liquor traffic of the country is to-day the back bone of the traffic. It is worse: its tacit sanction of that by which it benefits so largely, is the benumbing vice-like grip upon the national conscience, which stifles conviction and smothers the agonizing cries of the nation's victims.

But some will say: Is it not better to place the restriction of a heavy tax upon liquors and the traffic in them.

Restriction is only good by as much as it restricts. As a general rule no restriction is of much use save as it may be in the direct line of prohibition, e. g., the prohibition of sale to minors, to drunkards, and on certain days is restrictions which enforced, may be very useful. But a restriction whose active principle is permission, is not and cannot be, in the nature of things, much hindrance to evil.

Levying a tax of 90 cents on every gallon of spirits is a species of permission. It is permission after the tax is paid. It is the government's promise to interfere no further. It is not therefore a real restriction. But does it not restrict? Read the revenue reports for the past twenty years. Note the amount collected in 1863, $5,176,530.60, and then read that with an average tax of 70½ cents through the twenty years, the revenue from distilled spirits has increased nearly 1,500 per cent in that period, the returns for 1883 having about $75,000,000. Does that look like restriction, and is not that sort of restriction just the sort distillers like? Could the free and untrammelled traffic have been worse?

And now is it not patent that a national movement is necessary to dislodge and destroy a national evil? Is it not moreover clear that the government will not reform itself, that it will not condemn that which fattens it.

The government partnership with the liquor traffic is the great legal and moral (?) scaffolding by which that traffic has reared itself into a national institution, and an institution that will inevitably bankrupt and ruin the nation.

Let the people, to whom only government is amenable, and whose creature it is, decide if the national partnership with evil shall be continued.

POLITICAL.

A meeting of the Tammany Hall General Committee, called for the purpose of determining what action should be taken in the pending contest, was held on the evening of Sept. 12. The hall was crowded with spectators. John Kelly called the meeting to order, and Senator Foster was made chairman. After electing upon the amended history of Tammany Hall, he has never severed from its allegiance to the Democratic party nor faltered in its support of the candidates nominated by and in the principles enunciated from the platform of the National Democratic Conventions, the report says that in respect to the candidates now before the Democracy of the nation, "We acquiesce in the will of the majority of the representatives of the party, although we believe that will to have been inadvertently expressed. There is but one alternative left to us, to never concur or vote for the nominees of the party, whose cannot and will not do." The address concludes by reviewing some of the Democratic victories, recounts the contests of the sachems in past Presidential contests, and the lunch treasurer, in the Democratic convention, and concludes with the following: "Resolved, That we, the Democratic republican General Committee of the City and County of New York, in Tammany Hall assembled, hereby ratify and reiterate sentiments made by the National Democratic Convention held in Chicago on July 10, 1884—for President, Grover Cleveland, of New York; for Vice President, Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, and hereby pledge ourselves to an earnest and cordial support of the candidates so nominated." The reading of the resolution was received with applause, mingled with hisses. Ex-Senator Jessup in a speech bitterly denounced Cleveland, and in closing his remarks said that he should support Benjamin F. Butler. Gen. Spinola in response to the action of the committee in a fierce speech. Wm. Beurke Cockran followed in an eloquent speech succeeding the motion. The calling of the roll of the districts and resolution was then proceeded with, and resulted in their adoption by an over-whelming majority. The vote stood—310 yeas, 87 nays. On motion, the vote was made unanimous.

The Democratic State Convention of Nebraska met at Omaha and agreed upon an alliance with the Anti-Monopolists. The platform before the Chicago convention denounces the school-land frauds in Nebraska, presented by the Republican administration, condemns high tariff, but denounces protection; declares that corporate capital must keep its hands off the reserved rights of the people; that railroads must keep out of politics; that the Legislature has the right to control railroads, and that railroads have no right to control the Legislature. The following Congressional nominees were nominated on the State ticket: Governor, J. Sterling Morton; Treasurer, Daniel Dinsey; Attorney General, C. S. Montgomery; Secretary of State, H. E. Bonnett. The following Anti-Monopolists were nominated: Lieutenant Governor, I. C. Pace; Auditor, G. Bender; Commissioner of Public Lands and Buildings, Jos. Sherman; Superintendent Public Instruction, A. N. Beam; Regent State University, H. P. Scherff. Two Democratic and three Butler electors were nominated.

The Colorado Republican State Convention, which, after a stormy session of four days, nominated Hon. Ben H. Eaton, of Weld County, for Governor; Peter Dawes, of Lake, for Lieutenant Governor; and J. E. Sykes, of Denver, for Congress. There was great trouble in the convention over contesting delegations, and the contest was the bitterest in the Centennial State's political history.

The Nebraska Prohibitionists met in State convention at Lincoln, J. G. Miller was nominated for Governor by acclamation, and H. H. Shedd, the Republican nominee, indorsed for Lieutenant Governor. Five Republican representative electors were also nominated.

A dispatch from Portland, Me., says that nearly complete official returns of the Maine election show that the vote was about 146,136—the largest ever cast at any election ever one. Robie received 75,718, against 58,228 cast for Redman, Democrat, and 2,147 cast for Eaton, Greenbacker. The constitutional amendment prohibitory amendment is adopted by a majority of over 40,000.

Mr. Conkling Talks on the Situation—He Will Probably Support Butler.

Blaine in Boston, Hendricks at Peoria, Butler at Louisville, and Daniel at the Hub.

Conkling Talks.

[New York special.]

Conkling tells all newspaper reporters that he is out of public life and has no interest in politics, and he adds that he will not be a Republican supplicant, however, he talks with the Democrats.

"I cannot know he said yesterday that to implacent both parties had nominated such unworthy men. He could not consistently with his conscience vote for either. He gave his friend to understand that he would vote for Butler if he voted at all. If he takes any part in politics he will oppose the nomination of Blaine. He said that there would be many men in both of the great parties who would vote against Blaine if they knew what the Republican party has done, but what it will do we know not. It was, but what it will do we know not. Lincoln and Seward and Chase and Adams and Stanton and Fessenden and others, and where, but where are Blaine and Dolmont and Sailor and Elkins and Logan and Conkling? Our ranks are so thin and our cause in such jeopardy that we can only console the future of our country. For many years we have been in the minority, and we have always been in every one, and we have always been in every one, and we have always been in every one

Democratic County Convention.

Attention is directed to the call for a county convention to be held at Boyne, Thursday, Oct. 9th, to nominate candidates for county officers. Township committees are requested to call their caucuses and nominate as delegates men who can and will act, and see that every such delegate is in attendance. The call is made at Boyne to accommodate the eastern townships; now they should respond with full delegations of active men.

Conkling for Butler.

An Albany special on the New York situation says: "The Stalwarts are very angry, and in New York, Utica, and Albany some of them are talking openly for Cleveland. Conkling tells all newspaper reporters that he is out of public life, and has no interest in politics, and has nothing to say. To his friends and acquaintances, however, he talks with the utmost freedom. To one of these he said yesterday that in his judgment both parties had nominated bad and unworthy men. He gave his friend to understand that he would vote for Butler if he voted at all. If he takes any part in politics he will use his influence to direct republicans to vote for Butler.

Land Grants to Corporations.

During his speech last week Congressman Cutcheon raised the question of responsibility for the large grants of land to corporations, and charged that the bulk of the public domain was disposed of by the democrats before the republicans came into power. This is not a fact.

Prior to 1862 no grants were made to corporations, but to states, which were held responsible for the work, and in some cases owned the improvements made. The total grants to states will be seen in the following table:

STATES.	Lands granted by States.	Miles of Railway completed.	No. Acres Grant per Mile of Road.
Alabama	2,932,852	632	3,586
Arkansas	2,628,864	629	3,830

Totals	35,894,375	10,928

Average number of acres of land per mile, 3,290.

Compare with this the grants afterwards made to corporations, when the republicans had full control of the machinery of government, and then say who gave away the bulk of the public domain:

NAMES OF CORPORATIONS.	No. Acres granted by Congress.	Miles of Road completed.	No. Acres per mile of Road.
Kansas Pacific	6,000,000	694	8,646
Central Pacific	12,800,000	1,251	10,232
Oregon Central (Ore. Pacific)	3,840,000	348	11,034
Union Pacific	12,000,000	1,087	11,040
Sioux City Pacific	404,480	105	3,852
Northern Pacific	47,000,000	2,563	18,338
Texas Pacific	15,000,000	1,256	11,943
Atlantic and Pacific	42,000,000	1,206	34,826
Total	139,046,480	7,512	18,510

By the footings of the above tables it will be seen that under democratic rule less than thirty-six million acres of land built nearly eleven thousand miles of railroad, an average of less than three thousand three hundred acres per mile of road, while under republican rule over one hundred and thirty-nine million acres built less than eight thousand miles of road, an average of over eighteen thousand acres of land to each mile of road.

In the one case the improvements were controlled by the states (by the people themselves), and when forfeited the government demanded their return. In the other case the lands were given entirely for the benefit and private gain of the members of the corporations.

The republicans dare not defend the system they inaugurated, but undertake by false and evasive statements to prejudice the voters and throw the responsibility on others.

Notes and News.

The Cassopolis Democrat calls Blaine a "disowned knight."

"Burn this."—J. G. Blaine. "Tell the truth."—Grover Cleveland.—Albany Argus.

Would it not be a good plan for the democrats to hire Gen Cutcheon to make a few more speeches here this fall?

Ex Senator Grady, of New York, will visit Boston with General Butler, and will stump the state in the interest of the people's party.

The Michigan Tradesman has completed its first year, and it is a healthy yearling, too. In appearance its its success has been marvelous.

It is related at Chase that Gen. Cutcheon's republican speech there the other night resulted in converting several republicans out of the party, and the relator says, "I thank God for it."—Evening News.

The republican managers should withdraw Gen. Cutcheon from the canvass. From every meeting come reports of men disgusted, declaring they have always voted the republican ticket but never will again.

The Indiana republican campaign fund is all out, and the committee are several thousand dollars in arrears. All the government employes as well as republicans generally have received a circular inviting them to contribute a reasonable sum toward paying the expenses of the campaign. The five postmasters who were members of the committee have resigned. Blaine's war has been an aggressive campaign.—G. R. Democrat.

Lloyd Breese has been sold out of the Evening Journal and he will take a place on a weekly in New York. The Journal is now managed by S. J. Tomlinson, an old republican editor, and republican money supports it.

A man of fine sensibilities should not accept the office of sheriff, if he would keep faith with the great republican party, for in the language of congressman Cutcheon, when he executes the law he becomes very coarse and brutal, and unfit to be classed with gentlemen.

It turns out that the money behind the Detroit Evening Journal has been furnished from a source very closely related to U. S. Senator Palmer. This will account for the policies of the sheet. It has been sailing under false colors. It is not independent, but republican.

To Workingmen.

Has not the republican party controlled the national administration for almost twenty four years?

Has it not enacted all the laws during that time?

Has it not executed the laws by men of its choice?

Has the party brought prosperity to you and your families?

Are you working for good wages all the time?

Are there no mills closed?

Are wages not cut down?

Do you find living cheap, rents low, provisions abundant and low priced, clothing and other supplies down to the cut in pay?

How many days have you been idle since last New Year's?

Can you tell when work will be abundant, wages good?

Are business affairs satisfactory to you?

Did not the republican party make business affairs what they are and as bad as they are?

Are much more are your wages today than they were four years ago, when this same republican party promised you more pay and more work if you would support its ticket?

Who has grown richer in the last four years of republican policy, you or the men who were rich then and who seek to allure you with the same sort of arguments now?—Albany Argus.

☞ Be sure and get photographs of your yourself and family before Dave Bradlee leaves town. His work is giving the best of satisfaction.

It is said by gentlemen who know but so much state of affairs exists in England as pictured by Mr. Cutcheon; that there is no pauperism in England approaching the severity outlined by him.

F. S. Hulbert, of East Jordan, has sold his hotel property, (real estate, building, and furniture) to D. C. Loveday, who will take possession Oct. 10th.

The Ladies' Guild will meet at Mrs. Clifford's, next Wednesday afternoon, Oct. 1, at 2 o'clock. All interested in the Episcopal society are cordially invited.

D. C. Loveday of this place has purchased the Hulbert house property of East Jordan. It will be painted and refitted and leased for a first class house.

Elmira claims to have erected more substantial and fine-looking buildings during the present season than any other town of its size along the Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R.

Arlo Howard is at Saline this week. Soon after his return, a newly married couple will occupy a newly furnished house on the south side,—at least we are so informed.

☞ A. D. Bradlee has a few more very fine 7x10 picture frames left. All the gallery and see them, they are for sale cheap. Gallery opposite Geo. Miller's clothing house, Charlevoix.

A Harbor Springs man who returned from Chicago last week, reports the city full of lawyers, and a feeling among business men he met that that trade was going to be more lively by this fall with prospects of a busy winter.

"Hullo, Jones, where are you going?" said Smith, as he met Jones hurrying down the street, with his gripsack in his hand. "Going to take the steamer Gazelle for South Arm, to buy some of those new goods Sol. Isaman has just received."

During the northwest gale the schooner A. E. C. F. M., parted her anchor chain and went ashore at Gill's Pier. She is on rocky bottom. The tug Coe, with steam pumps, left for the wreck on the 18th. The vessel is valued at $4,000. There is no insurance on the vessel or cargo.

☞ Services will be resumed at the M. E. church next Sunday. The sermon sabbatatory, will be delivered by the pastor in the morning. At the evening service the theme, "How ought we to demean ourselves during the present political canvass." Let all who can, come and enjoy truth uttered the times.

The schooner Alaska sprang a leak and stranded at Scott's Point, twenty miles north of Beaver Island, Tuesday night, Sept. 18th, in a heavy southerly gale. She will prove a total loss, as the recent heavy southwesterly gales since have no doubt used her all up. The crew will save all they can. She was laden with ore from Escanaba and was insured for $5,000.

The Harbor Springs Independent has the following concerning Judge S. S. Fallass, nominee for congressman on the union ticket: "No better man could have been found. Mr. Fallass, is well known throughout the entire district. He is one of the most popular men in northern Michigan, and his ability and integrity will win for him thousands of republican votes."

The report of W. R. Stacheouish, presiding elder of the Grand Traverse district, at the annual conference, showed revivals on the following charges: Bellaire, Spencer Creek, Beaconia, Boyne, Cadillac, Cadillac Circuit, Cross Village, Elk Rapids, Frankfort, Petoskey, Traverse City, and at other points. New churches have been erected at Elmira, Inland and Frankfort and dedicated at Fife Lake and Kingsley's. The society at Kalkaska is greatly embarrassed by a heavy church debt. Improvements have been made on church property to the value of $10,000 at Cadillac, Frankfort, Lake City and Mancelona.—Herald.

The traveling correspondent of the Detroit Post has the following to say regarding the village of Eastport, Antrim county: This busy, thriving little town is located right at the head of Torch Lake, a sheet of water which runs parallel with Grand Traverse bay for twenty miles, and is separated by only a narrow strip of land. This town consists of two or three general stores, one drug store, one large mill which runs most of the year, and other shops and places of business. Two fine hotels look out on the lake. A neat school house has been erected and a new church is soon to be built. The population of the town is about 200. The surrounding country is well settled. Water crafts of all kinds ply on Torch lake and a large business is carried on in towing logs, posts, etc., to the various mills located on its banks, as well as a general freight and passenger business. It is a common occurrence to see boats loaded to the water's edge with lumber, lock bark, telegraph poles, paving blocks, etc., bound for Chicago and other points."

The Nashville Students.

It is not necessary to mention the merits of this excellent troupe to any who ever heard them sing, as a Charlevoix audience heard them last year. They were, by all odds, the best of the season. But for the benefit of those who never heard them, we print the following from the Nashville World: "Fully two thousand people were at the state capitol last night, to listen to the concert tendered by the original Nashville Students to the Tennessee legislature and their friends. It was a charming treat; one that was heartily appreciated and thoroughly enjoyed. It is astonishing what pathos, what soul-stirring beauty, dwells in the voice of these black-skinned songsters. By nature they are endowed with the soul of music; by culture this genius has been made perfect control, and for melody, for sweetness of voice, for correct time, for expression of true vocal sentiment, their quaint, weird like refrains brought back to memory visions of the old plantation days, camp meetings, break-downs, fields and forests of our ante-bellum sunny south." This troupe will be at the opera house next Thursday, Sept. 30, under the auspices of Baxter post, G. A. R.

Little Traverse Bay Light.

Official notice is received at this port from the office of the lighthouse board at Washington that on and after Sept. 25 inst. a fixed red light of the fourth order will be shown from the light-house recently erected at Harbor Point, Little Traverse bay, Mich. The apparatus lights the entire horizon and the focal plane is 41 feet above the lake. The light should be seen in clear weather from the deck of a vessel 10 feet above the lake 12½ statute miles. The structure is a square red brick tower with a red brick dwelling attached and the lantern is painted white. The approximate position of the light house as taken from the lake survey charts is latitude 45 degrees 25 minutes 7 seconds west. The magnetic bearing and distances from prominent objects are as follows: Beaver Island light house, west northwest 31 statute miles; South Fox lighthouse, west ¾ south 42 statute miles; Grand Traverse lighthouse, southwest by west ¾ west 31 statute miles.—Record.

South Arm.

A very heavy rainstorm visited us on Friday night and was followed by a slight frost on that night and the following.

A boy arrived at A. E. Scofield's on Sunday, Sept. 14th, weighing nearly 10 pounds.

Mr. Robinson and family have moved into S. G. Isaman's farm house.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Vance and children went to Echo on Friday last.

Mr. John Roe spent several days last week at his homestead near Intermediate.

It is rumored that Davis & Dean are having some trouble with the C. R. & I. R. R. concerning timber taken from the company's lands.

Rev. Richard Tyndall has returned from conference and is visiting friends here before going to his pastoral work at Glen Haven.

A few people from South Arm attended church service at East Jordan and heard Elder Sparks last sermon. He returns to Cincinnati this week for another year's study, before entering upon his ministerial duties. He has many warm friends here who regret his departure, and who hoped he would be induced to remain as pastor.

Rev. P. Blake, formerly M. E. pastor here has declined the work assigned him by the presiding elder, and has accepted a call to become pastor of the Presbyterian church at East Jordan. He enters upon his pastoral labors next Sunday.

Burgess.

The saw mill and broom handle factory at Shakomsky's was burned last Sunday morning. Loss about $2,000, besides about $800 worth of lumber.

W. C. Arnold put in fifteen acres of fall wheat one day last week, had four teams at work.

Charles Arnold finished picking his hops last Wednesday; and fifty at work in his yard.

Moses Cooper and wife were visiting their nephew and neice, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Long, of Evangeline, last Sunday.

If the ladies of Hayes want to have peppermint tissue they must quit chewing gum nights.

Jack Sunsby's youngest child is very sick.

A meeting of the town school board to consider the necessity of dividing school district No. 3, has been held. They are to meet again at some time in the future at Whitford's school house, to let the people decide whether they want it divided or not.

The Hamlin brothers are doing about all the threshing in this town.

BY JENNIE S. JUDSON.

Oh! glittering spike of snow-white bells,
Standing out pale where the moon beams fall,
You teach my heart a lesson to-night,
As I see you from this slim old hall.

Your beauty springs from a bed of spikes
Which cunningly lurkest amid your feet;
Your home is but the rough roadside,
Yet how could you be more fair, more sweet?

My spirit, too, lies in a thorny way,
Its scenes, its time are about me now;
Yet tell me its illumes its course
With bright, fair hopes and a cheerful brow.

MAUD FLEMING'S REVENGE.

BY H. MARIA GEORGE.

Percy Hamilton was by all odds the handsomest and most dashing man in Aylesville, a fellow something like Guido's Beatrice, Granucci-de Vigne, somewhat proud and somewhat vain, with a touch of the old noblesse oblige about him that accorded well with his tall, statuesque figure and his bronze type of beauty. He was 28 years old, and rich, so rich, that he could follow his profession—the law—or let it alone as he chose; and for the most part he chose to let it alone.

Percy had lately returned from a three years' travel in the old world, bearded and browned as an Arab, and with the air of a grand prince. The pale, sickly gallants of Aylesville felt back in his presence as the advent of the gay and brilliant fellow, full of his reminiscences of Egypt and the Golden Horn, and of talk of Parisian soirees and of nights at Baden-Baden. He had always had his way in this old sur-Indian town, and it was quite natural that he should fall into the leadership again.

The young fellow had excellent parts, for he had used them, and had not used them ill, and had not used them to the knowledge of his uncle, who had made him a little reckless and desperate. When he grew up—handsome as a young Adonis—all the women went to work and spoiled him, as they generally do a handsome man. Then his uncle died and left him a fortune, and so there was nothing for the young man but to enjoy himself.

He had a wonderful capacity for flirtations, and more than one woman's happiness was sacrificed to his vanity and recklessness. Against one fair girl he had committed the very blackest of deadly wrongs, and Maud Fleming was glad to hide herself in obscurity from the scorn and reproaches of that—constant world which never forgives in a woman the sin it winks at in a man. Even that hour she had never been heard from.

But Percy Hamilton held up his head and went on his way, and beautiful women, virtuous women they called them—two, smiled on him as sweetly as ever. Three years had gone by since that sad event, and many had forgotten it but ever happened. The fair beauties of Aylesville were completely fascinated by the fame and manners of the dashing fellow; in fact, were mad over him—all but one.

And she, Agnes Harcourt, was the most beautiful of them, and the one whom Percy was the most desirous to interest. Indeed, any man would have flirted with Miss Harcourt.

They called her a girl, but she was not one exactly, though she was small, too haughty to deny the charge. Hearts and fortunes innumerable had been laid at her feet, but she quietly rejected them all, and passed on in her queenly way, gracious and charming, but as unconquerable as ever. To do her justice, she never appeared to seek admirations.

She had been but a little time in Aylesville. Where she came from nobody could ever ascertain. The first they knew of her, she had come into their midst one gorgeous June morning, as if dropped from the clouds, herself more gorgeous in her magnificent dress and glorious beauty than the brilliant sky above her. The next day heard she had purchased a handsome residence in the outskirts of the town and was refitting and furnishing it magnificently enough for a princess, villa. She seemed the possessor of marvelous wealth, and wealth everywhere has its adorers.

Of course Miss Harcourt soon met Mr. Hamilton. At the very first meeting he appeared to be completely fascinated, and soon became her most devoted admirer. It went on for three months in the usual way. Parties, delightfuls, operas, etc., and Hamilton everywhere Miss Harcourt attended. It was evident that Percy had more than his vanity aroused; that his heart was touched and that he was in deadly earnest. As for Miss Harcourt no one could tell.

In February there was a fete at Harcourt Lodge. All upper tendom was present. The hostess was magnificent in a dress of black velvet, with diamonds on her neck and arms. No one had ever seen her so graceful and queenly. There was a flush on her cheeks and a sparkle in her eyes, and there was a resonant ring in her voice like the echo of silver bells. Some of her old lovers felt the flame stirring anew, and looked daggers at Hamilton, who seemed the hero of the hour. A few others did not regard him with any favor at all.

"By Jove!" said young Bob Alcott, whom she had jilted some six months previously, "Miss Harcourt is on her high horse to-night, but there's break-a-leg ahead. Do you see how spoony Percy is?"

"Oh, I'll risk Hamilton," answered Fred Cleveland. "He cut his eye teeth long ago, and Miss Harcourt knows it."

"I don't care," said Alcott; "there's fun ahead, and don't you forget it. Look at him now while she is talking to him. Why, man, there's a flush on his cheek like a girl's blush at her lover's first kiss. And she—I rather think I know the meaning of the steely gleam in those eyes of hers. Well, I rather guess I do."

His companion laughed, for most people did not give Hamilton the credit of having any heart, although they regarded Miss Harcourt as a scientific conquette.

Two hours afterward, if any one had been in the conservatory they might have heard that which showed plainly that Percy Hamilton had a heart and that it all belonged to this woman. They stood face to face in the dim, soft light, amid the perfume of the flowers, her face very calm and even cold, his full of passionate tenderness and contrated passion.

"Agnes, I love you," he cried. "I love you passionately."

"I am sure that is very kind, but is it just wise in you?" She said this very haughtily, and looked at him with a spirit quite equal to his own in mockery in it.

"Do you mean to drive me mad, Agnes Harcourt? I tell you this is the love of my life. My whole heart and soul, and everything that has to do with my own, to hold against the world. Do you understand me; do you believe me?"

He flung out his arms to her, but she retreated a pace or two and raised her face to his. Every word she spoke was clear and distinct as the tone of a trumpet, and yet her voice was lifted scarcely above a whisper. And as she stood there in her haughty triumph, it almost seemed to this man who loved her that she was larger by one-half in stature than ever before.

"Mr. Hamilton, I understand you and I will answer you. You say that you love me. So you told me once before, years ago, and you were recreant to your vows. How can I believe you now? Ha, you start! I see you do not remember me, but do you not remember Maud Fleming? You never thought of your victim, perhaps, for a second time. You thought your crime would go unpunished. It was fortunate for you, coward and hypocrite, that I loved you as I did, else I should have published you to the world as a betrayer, and I have taken my own way to keep as still. Percy, I loved you once better than my soul, but that love has long since turned to hate. Sooner than wed you I would make myself the wife of the lowest brute in the universe rather than be called a man. There, you have my answer. Go!"

She lifted her white hand with all the imperious grace of an empress, and pointed to the door. He obeyed her behest, and his eyes had in them a sort of stony desperation like those of a man doomed to death.

No man's pen should attempt to write a wrong.

SOMETHING ABOUT COFFEE.

Perhaps the most important individual of the Cinchona tribe is the coffee plant. Coffee is the produce of an evergreen shrub, a native of Abyssinia and Arabia. The fruit is a berry about the size of a cherry, covered with a pulp sweet in taste and not very thick. Inside this pulp are two seeds, separated from each other by a parchment-like membrane. These seeds are the well-known coffee. The coffee-seed has been frequently analyzed; chemists have found in it several oily gums and albuminous matters, but the valuable principle is crystalline and alkaloidal—caffeine. Every person knows that coffee is rendered fit for culinary purposes by the process of roasting, but the precise agency of this roasting process is not understood.

It is supposed that it was only in the fifteenth century that coffee was transported from Abyssinia to Arabia Felix. But if Arabia be not the native land of coffee, it is at least its most prominent adopted home. Nowhere the dose the plant flourish better, nowhere is the drinking coffee so delicious in flavor, especially that raised in the country of Yemen, in the environs of Mocha. The Oriental's, it is well known, first introduced the use of coffee into Europe; but when they, the Orientals, first became acquainted with the beverage is a still more doubtful point. An Arabian author of the fifteenth century, named Sheikhedin, states that the Persians, early in the sixteenth century, was the first who used coffee as a beverage; but it is certain that the general use of the infusion was known in Persia. According to a valet traditional, the discovery of coffee is due to the Mufti Chadelly, whose memory is held in reverence by all true Mussulmans. This pious man, afflicted with sorrow at the decay of the religious fervor, neglected for the performance of his nocturnal devotions. Inasmuch Mohammed is reported as saying that the faithful might be classed away, Mohammed, touched with pity, as well he might seeing that his own honor was concerned, so brought matters about that a herdsman, aware he was against Mufti Chadelly of the omissions fact that his goats could not get to pasture by sleep after they had partaken of coffee berries, but kept frisking about all night long. The Mufti, hailing the hint, at once prepared a good strong dose of coffee. He drank it, and was delighted beyond measure at the result. Not a wink of sleep did he get, but the sensations which arose on the hour, and his midnight devotions were so fervent that he almost communed with the spirits of the blessed. He prescribed coffee to some devotees, who, imitating his example, habituated the practice to use in the seventh heaven of bliss, with unceasing prayers.

According to another tale, the discovery was made by the prior of a convent at Marmites, who, on receiving the report of a camel-driver to the effect that his beasts could get no sleep after having browsed on the coffee plant, bethought himself what a good thing a coffee would be for his monks, who like the Mufti Chadelly, appear to have been torpid, sleepy fellows, and had acquired the disreputable habit of not quite obsolete now—of going to sleep in church. The experiment, we are told, was quite successful.

But coffee, like many other good things, had its enemies, and, strange to say, the very Mohammedans were at one time first to patronize it because its most rancorous foes. The fact was this. So generally was coffee approved of by the Arabian populace that people, instead of going to the mosque spent their days in coffee-shops; and as there does not appear to have been any act of Parliament to enforce the closing of coffee houses during church or rather mosque hours, the priests began to evidence of empty benches. Forthwith the mullahs anathematized the seductive berry and declared it to be the devil, their said, was as bad as wine or strong liquors, if not worse. In employment was interdicted throughout every part of the Turkish Empire, religious anathemas, however, being insufficient to check the growing evil, at length an appeal was made to a physical force. "In the year of the Hegira 945" (A. D. 1538), says an Arabian historian, "while large numbers were assembled in the mosth of Khumaiha, employed in drinking coffee, the captain of the guard surprised them, imitated them ignominiously from the shops, and threw them up all night in the Pacha's house, and the next morning administered to each individual, by way of a salutary admonitions, seventeen stripes."

Persecution, as usual, accomplished a result the very opposite of that intended. Coffee speedily became universally popular. In the first half of the seventeenth century there numbered in Cairo no less than 2,000 coffee shops. At the present time coffee is among Eastern Mussulmans one of the first necessaries of life. When a Turk adds a new wife to his associated beauties in the harem, he invites his friends that she is always to have plenty of coffee. If certain modern accounts, however, are to be believed, the fair ladies have got into the habit of drinking brandy. According to Mohammed, they have no souls to lose; hence they may drink spirituous liquor with impunity.

Before the seventeenth century coffee was scarcely known in Christendom, by name. At length certain travelers returning from the East brought a little coffee with them for their own private use. In the year 1657, Thevenot invited some friends to a party, and gave them coffee to drink; but he had been prevented by a friend, who, three years before, had established at Paris a coffee shop; his speculation, however, did not succeed. It was in his house that coffee first became popularized. The Turkish Ambassador at the French Court, Solimas Aga, was in the habit of offering coffee, after the manner of his country, to those who attended his levees. The ladies of the French Court no sooner heard of this custom than they expressed their desire of tasting the seductive liquor, whereupon the Turk being a polite fellow and Turks are, invited the ladies to his house, and gave them coffee to their hearts' content. Madame de Sevigne was opposed to this fashion; she did not approve of coffee; said it was only a short-lived fashion; that it would pass away and be forgotten. Her fears were groundless. Coffee, after all, though not after the fashion she intended; coffee has passed away unseen together "like Rarey." About the same time it was that coffee first came into favor at Vienna. The Turks driven from before the walls of that city by Sobieski, left their camp in the hands of the conqueror. In this camp here was abundance of coffee and at returns of slaves which offer to prepare it. Coffee had already been introduced among the Londoners in the reign of Charles II. by Pasqua Rosee, chaunt, named Edwards, returning from Smyrna, brought him as a Greek servant. Pasquet, by name, who opened a coffee-shop in New-Jonathan's Court, Cornhill, in 1652. Other coffee-shops speedily arose; coffee became in vogue; set fire to the world against them, and closed them, fearing lest they might injure the revenue. Another tradition states that the first coffee-shop in England was opened by a Jew named Jacobs, at the Angel, in 1650.

All the supplies of coffee imported for a long time into Europe were obtained from Arabia. It was brought by way of Alexandria and Venice, but the Pashas of Egypt and Syria imposed exorbitant duties upon it, and thus they began to obtain it by the channel of the Red Sea. Holland took it from the Arabians, transplanted it to Java, France, and, lastly, England, in 1670, the Dutch, under the direction of Van Horne, Red President of the Dutch East-India colonies, having procured certain coffee plants, sent them to Batavia, where they flourished well. The French next introduced coffee into Martinique; and the English following their example, planted the coffee shrub in many of their tropical colonies.

In the United States coffee is consumed to the amount of about sixteen million dollars annually, and is exceeded in quantity only by tea, and in importation.

In Australian Intoxicant.

Their own stimulant, kava, they continue to use in great quantities, and some of the Europeans have contracted a liking for it. Its flavor resembles that of tea, and it is said that it can compare it with. The root used is botanically known as that of the pepper plant, and it is said that it is known the object of the chewing, which is performed by the chiefs, and more freely than any other process. Europeans grate the root and pound it in a mortar, and the pulp is prepared to be chewed. In Samoa the preparation of kava is made a ceremonial, and, in great ceremony, only the young unmarried girls are allowed to chew it. The root is cut up into fine pieces, and the girls who are thus employed for the first of them, first rinse their mouths, take up a piece, and when sufficiently masticated and formed into a ball, spit it into the bowl. The chief girl then calls for water, and, after washing her hands, directs one of her companions to pour on the water while she stirs the pulp with her hand. When enough water is in, and the bulls are properly mixed with the ingredients, she takes up a strainer made of fibres of the hibiscus and passes it from side to side of the bowl. When the strainer is saturated she lifts it high above the bowl and squeezes the liquid into a calabash held in her hand. This is continued until the kava bowl is read. The calabashes of some of the Europeans who participated was that the satisfaction is perfectly dry and is a more crushing process, but of course an amount of saliva must get incorporated in the process, and the medicinal properties of kava are tonic and nervous sedative, and it is these effects, and not to its flavor, that the taste for the drink arises.—Metbourne Australian Leader.

A Quiet Man in Mexico.

A prominent citizen of Mexico returned from a trip into South America last week. He had been gone three months.

"Elected a new President since I've been gone?" he asked of a friend.

"Oh, yes."

"How many?"

"Only one."

"Any revolutions?"

"Only three."

"What's become of Mena?"

"Oh, he was shot last week."

"And Zagoni?"

"Transported."

"And St. Budier?"

"The same as when you left."

"Is that so? I'm surprised that he should be at one thing so long. He was a very enterprising sort of a man. Where is he?"

"Dead."—New York Times.

IN COMPANY it is a very great fault to be more forward in setting one's self off and talking to show one's parts than to learn the worth and to know and be acquainted with the abilities of others. MRS. RAY'S LODGERS,

And Her Romance That Ended Happily.

"What became of my little Miss L.? Why, my dear, do you remember her? Yes, I know you did not meet her, but only once—that was the day you spent with me when you were going East, through from Dakota.

"Well, I need not wonder that you do remember her. 'Twas a face to make an impression on one, I am sure. A dear, swell, tender face, indeed. Of course, my dear, I am only too pleased to tell you about her.

"Let me see! We were in that cozy flat on the north side then, and it was altogether the most desirable place I have lived in since we came to Chicago six years ago. I was sorry indeed to make a change.

"Oh, lay dear, many things happened then which would interest you to hear, I am sure. We took lodgers, you know. No, not to make money, but to help about rent, and I like to have people around me. You see Mr. Ray and I are growing old. Yes, old it will be soon if we are inclined to cling to middle-aged as our rightful title. And not a dear child of our own have we ever had. So we have room in our hearts for all who come under our roof, and sooner or later all my lodgers have come to seem like our own family. Why, there were those three boys who had the north room for two years. Noble lads, and away from their homes and their mothers, in a great city. How could I help mothering them a little? 'My boys' I always called them, and think of them as 'my boys' to this day. Those are their photographs on the mantel, my dear, and one of them was quite an artist. I will show you some little bits of his work by-and-by.

"But about little Miss L. I always called her that, and I came to love her dearly; I did indeed.

"She was in my house almost a year, you see, and she crept into my heart and I had no reason to regret it. I liked her the very first time I saw her, and the little parlor and bed-room pleased her so much that she engaged them at once, and brought her few belongings in the very next day. I was pleased to see her as she took about putting her knickknacks here and there in a quiet way of her own.

"Quiet contentment there seemed to be in her face, and yet I saw a shadow of something, I could not tell what, in her eyes which I came to long to drive away. I wanted to see her merry. She was not old enough to be so quiet, and nothing she told me afterward about herself seemed to explain it to me. But don't think she seemed unhappy! How well I remember for saying after only two or three days: 'Dear Mrs. Ray, I haven't been in so homelike a place for years. You have no idea how contented I am.' That pleased me, don't you see? That was what I wanted it to seem, my dear—homelike. Well, the light housekeeping helped me to get acquainted quickly. Yes, my dear, she had her little oil-stove, and cooked for herself, and I coaxed her to use my oven whenever she liked. Indeed, I was only too pleased to have her do so. Then I began to think she did not eat enough hearty food, and tried to persuade her to eat more meat. Now, you need not laugh, my dear. My boys? Well, later meat was medicine, anyway. I shall always say. I wanted her to grow bright and merry, don't you see?

"But, no, in spite of fresh air and hearty food there was the same quiet, and I almost knew it wasn't her natural manner. To be sure, there were reasons for her to be sad sometimes. She was all alone. She told me about her 'dear, dear mother,' and how tenderly she said it.

"'Her mother's picture was in a little frame on a bracket, and there was a tiny bunch of pressed violets pinned against it.

"'Mamma died when I was 12,' she said one day, 'and after awhile papa married again.' Then she waited for a moment and then said, with a firm look coming around her mouth, 'And I am happier to take care of myself.'

"And she earned enough money, my dear, to do it. There were the piano-pupils—almost every day she was away down here on the south side—giving her lessons. Then, between times, she painted the prettiest little things, and they sold, too, though hardly for what they were worth, I am sure. Yes, she was always busy. 'Plenty to do, and strength to do it.' I said to her once. 'Surely, little Miss L., that ought to make you happy.'

"She looked up and smiled at me, and said, 'I am not unhappy.'

"No, my dear, and she wasn't, yet she was not what I felt sure she might be, and had been, and that was bright and merry. Why, she never sang! And she had a voice, for she had told me of singing here and there in years gone. Now, I know when there is a really happy heart a song comes bubbling up from it now and then—a little humming over the work you know, my dear, at least. But I never heard it for seven or eight months. Then, a Sunday morning I remember it was, and I noticed it, for it surprised and delighted me.

"'Why, William,' said I (that's Mr. Ray, you know, my dear), 'little Miss L. is singing!'

"And we both listened, and then she sang the words right out, and what do you think they were? No, not a bit of a hymn-tune. 'Twas this:

"For I will marry my own love,
My own love, my own love.

"Then she stopped, but after a little she sang again:

"For true of heart am I.

"Well my dear, to say I was astonished isn't saying much.

"But I kept quiet, you may be sure, and when I went in, after awhile, with Ellen, my funny little Swedish maid, to tidy up things a bit, and said 'Good-morning' to little Miss L., there was a new look on her face. Not that the shadow I told you about was all gone, either. Well, of course, it puzzled me, and the next day, and the next, I watched her, and she seemed different in some way.

"Then Wednesday, my dear, I said something. You see, 'twas this way: I went in with a plate of cakes for her, and I said: 'These doughnuts are not as good as usual, I'm afraid,' and she said, 'Do not think I shall lay that up against you, Mrs. Ray,' and laughed such a merry little laugh, my dear, that I just stopped and looked at her in blank amazement.

"'The light-heartedness that showed itself in that foolish little pun and in the laugh!

"'I sat down my plate and took hold of her with both hands. 'Little Miss L.,' said I, 'now do please tell me what makes you so sunshiny for two or three days?'

"'Why, am I?' she asked, and a pretty pink color came into her cheeks; then she grew a little bit grave and hesitated, and then—

"'Well, I'll tell you, dear Mrs. Ray,' she said, 'though I am afraid you will think me very, very foolish. It is a little dream I had last Saturday night. But first I must tell you that once—once there was some one I loved—my very dearly, Mrs. Ray, and he loved me, too, but there was a little—what shall I say? It was just a little foolish quarrel, anyway, and he went away angry, and—and—' her voice began to tremble, then she said, with a little impatient cough that was almost a sob, 'it was almost two years ago, and I have never seen him since.' But I know,' and she looked right at me, and spoke quite earnestly, 'I feel so sure, some way, that he is coming back to me soon. And now I'll tell you the dream.'

"Then she came and sat down right by me, my dear, and I took one of her hands in mine.

"'I dreamed,' she said, 'that the dear boy I loved was sitting in some room, which seemed to be my home, and it was Sunday. It is all very hazy and indefinite, and I had not spoken to him, but I went to his side and handed him a paper, or an envelope, or something like that, and he did not look up, but put out his hand and took mine and drew me nearer to him. I stood there just an instant, and some one said to him: 'Ralph, are you going to church this evening?' and without replying, he looked up into my eyes and asked, 'Are you?' I shook my head and he answered the question quietly, 'No, I think,' and Ralph put my hand more closely. And some way I knew we were at peace, and a great happiness came into my heart, and right then I awoke and found the tears running down my cheeks, and turned my face against the pillow and prayed a little prayer, and asked God to let the dream come true, and send him back to me, that we might help each other to be better and happier all the rest of our lives, and ever since that I've had a new little hope. And that is all. Is it very, very foolish?'

"She looked at me so wistfully. 'Why, my dear,' said I, and then 'why, my dear,' I said right over again, and then I just rose right up and went away, for my throat was getting all choked, and I knew I was going to act like a silly old woman and cry.

"'It was the simple, tender way in which she told it, don't you see? And the childlike faith! It was so long since I had seen that kind of faith.' You know, my dear, I've been about a great deal, and have seen something of this hard world, and there isn't much of that kind of faith to be found in grown-up people. You find it in little ones who kneel to say the 'Now I lay me,' to be sure, but I had almost forgotten all about it.

"'Well, the days passed by, and the hopefulness still shone out of her eyes, and sometimes I found myself singing.

"'One day about the 4th of February, I think, when I went in for a little chat, she was painting valentines. Such pretty and original little things. I must tell you about them.

"'Several weeks before little Miss L. had asked me for all the washbones of the chickens we ate, and as we invariably have chicken scrap at our Sunday dinner I had taken her quite a number of them. Well, my dear, she was using them in this way: On a heavy, square white card she put one of the washbones which she had gilded. Then in it, you know, with very narrow bright ribbon, and in the lower left-hand corner of the card were some flowers painted—forget-me-nots on one I remember. Then in the right-hand upper corner was some appropriate little rhyme in gilt letters.

"'The finishing touches were just being put to the fifth one as I went into the room, and little Miss L. held it up for me to see. 'It is the prettiest one I have made,' she said. 'Isn't the paper quaint, cut out of the gilded corner of a for tender thoughts.'

"'The rhyme of this was:

"'If your wish prove the same as mine
I'll be your faithful Valentine.

"'And down by the pansy were her initials, D. E. L. She had her mother's good, old-fashioned name, Dorothy. And now, my dear, comes the strangest part of the story, but of course you know it is all true. The next morning after little Miss L. had gone to her pupils I went down on the South Side, for I had the rent to pay and some shopping to do, and as I passed Haven by the window among other pretty things I saw little Miss L.'s valentine.

"'A brown-haired gentleman stood looking at them quite intently, and as I hurried along he went into the store. Well, my shopping took up more time than I had anticipated, and I went into Thompson's for lunch and took a seat at an empty table. Soon after a gentleman seated himself at a table opposite me. I fancied I had seen him somewhere, and thought he glanced rather sharply in my direction. He did this several times, and I decided he must be looking at some one behind me.

"'He was one of the particular kind, my dear, and was some time in selecting something for his lunch, but finally a tempting repast was placed before him. Just then a lady passed by me, going out, and I recognized little Miss L. I could not mistake that brown Russian circular nor the brown velvet hat, with the long, floating feather, although I did not see her face.

"'But think how astonished I was to see the gentleman opposite me start to his feet, hurry into his overcoat, snatch his hat, hastily hand the waiter some money, and, leaving his lunch untasted, rush out, apparently in pursuit of little Miss L.

"'Well, I finished my shopping and on my way to the street-car stopped for a minute at Bascom's window myself and saw that little Miss L.'s valentine with the pansy was gone.

"'Then I went home, and as I entered the hall noticed that little Miss L.'s door stood ajar and some one was with her. Now, I don't think I am an eavesdropper, my dear, and I give you my word I did not intend to listen while I took off my cloak and bonnet, but I heard a manly voice say: 'What kind of a feather is that on your hat, Dot?'

"'A bird of Paradise,' she answered, 'but why, Ralph?'

"'That is what I thought,' said he, 'and I followed it to its home.' Just then one of my parcels dropped and the noise brought little Miss L. to close her door, but seeing me she insisted on my coming in. She held a white card in her hand, and 'What do you think, dear Mrs. Ray? she said, 'one of my valentines has come back to me.'

"'Then she introduced Mr. Ralph Ainsworth, and her face was as bright as a sunbeam.

"'Well, of course, my dear, he proved to be the same brown-bearded gentleman I had seen twice before that same day, and I could not refrain from asking him how he enjoyed his lunch.

"'Then there was an explanation and a hearty laugh, and they told me how she old valentine had caught his eye, and the laughs I'll, I, took him into the store to learn the name and address of the artist, on whom he determined to call as soon after lunch as propriety would admit, he said.

"'And of course you guess all the rest, my dear.

"'She isn't little Miss L. any longer, and when they found Mr. Ray and I were coming over here on the South Side they insisted that we come right flat, and there they are to this day, as happy as happy can be.

"'She isn't little Miss L. any longer, and when they found Mr. Ray and I were coming over here on the South Side they insisted that we come right flat, and there they are to this day, as happy as happy can be.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Mr. Blaine's reply to the interrogatories propounded by the defense in the libel suit at Indianapolis were filed in the United States Circuit, on last evey, last week. Mr. Blaine states under oath that he was married in Minnesota, 48, on the 30th of June, 1850, in the Congregational Church, and St. Louis, Mo. The marriage was secret, at his mother's, Mrs. Gordon, Mr. Blaine being under the laws of Kentucky, which then stringently required a license from the Clerk of the County Court, and he was unmarried at the second time in Pittsburg, Pa., on the 29th of March, 1851, in the presence of John Y. Lemoyne and David Bell." He first child, a son, was born on the 9th of June, 1851. In regard to the declaration of the earlier conditions, Mr. Blaine says: "I have no recollection of ever meeting the lady in July, but have reason to believe, and do believe, that since that date among letters and figures thereon has been defaced, and that the figure 1 in the year 1851 has been erroneously inserted. I have no means of ascertaining by whom this was done, but have reason to believe, and do believe, that a person who is friend of the defendant or of the Democratic party, or one of the publishers of the New York Sun, a democratic paper published in this city, and that copies of said photograph were sent to citizens and sunday newspapers, including the publisher of the Indianapolis Sentinel, the defendant of this suit."

A dispatch from Brackhaven, Miss., says that a mob of forty men visited the Franklin County Jail, overpowered the jailer, took out four negro prisoners and proceeded to river in the Court House yard, where they were hanged to the trees of the yard. The charge was that they had attempted to assault a young girl. Two of the victims were married, and one father with seven and children. Four other prisoners were in the jail at the time, but were spared.

Intense excitement has been caused here by the discovery of an atrocious attempt to take the lives of the members of the Nuit family. The well from which the supply of water was drawn was poisoned by some unknown villains. Three of the young ladies are already dead, and other members of the family are dying. So far as can be ascertained, there is no apparent motive for this diabolical outrage, and all parts made thus far to have the perpetrators engaged in the horrible affair have proved a signal failure. The first intimation of the dreadful horror was the announcement last evening of the sudden death of Miss Annie Nuit, sister of Miss Lizzie Nuit, whose betrothed is N. L. Hayes who was killed by the tragic death of the young girl's father, in the vicinity of Dakes, who was shot by James Nuit. This morning Miss Lizzie Nuit, another of the sisters, expired, and news of her death was quickly circulated throughout the town, causing public opinion over the horrifying revelations. The water in the well is being analyzed, and the results are awaited with intense anxiety the result of the examination. In the absence of any known motive for the crime the story of the Nuit scandal and the consequent challenges are being excitedly discussed, and although they have been in the city but a day it is advanced that some friend of Dakes has or him, and if necessary will hire the assassins kill him by the brother of Miss Lizzie Nuit. Young James Nuit, the avenger of his sister's honor, who is at home, and also his sister Lizzie, were both made ill, but their conditions are not critical.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

Report of the Condition of the Crops in Europe.

[Washington dispatch.]

The report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for September has just been issued. It gives a very interesting report on the condition of the crops in Europe, India, and other foreign countries.

In Europe, as compared with last year, the barley and oat acreages have fallen of 5.8-10 per cent, and 2.8-10 per cent, respectively, and the sugar beet of 2.4 per cent, in wheat has an acreage before beyond the fine condition of the land to the last sowing season.

A dispatch to London from Calcutta expresses the opinion that India will be able to export 50,000,000 bushels of wheat in the ensuing year. The Cuttack commissioner observes that the increase of exports from India from a few hundred thousand bushels per annum ten to twenty years ago to 57,148,543 bushels in 1881 to and 39,127,977 bushels of sixty pounds 1883-84 year ended March 31, has caused the situation of the wheat-growing countries. It is known that India comes now in France and Russia as the chief competitors, and that these countries have only one and-sixty cents per bushel in United States of America.

The Commissioner speaks of the folly of attempting to "feed the nations of the earth." He says: "There are about 1,500,000,000 acres, and 12,000,000 acres are now tilled in excess of the area of the country, the product of which must be withdrawn, sooner or later, from cultivation with the grain of Russia, of South America, of Austria, and of India. There is need 1,500 miles by land and 1,000 miles by sea, and from California to Liverpool, and from Chicago to Liverpool, and from Chicago to Liverpool, and from Chicago

Judge Fallass at Home.

If there is a democrat, greenbacker or laborer in the ninth congressional district who feels that he cannot cast his vote for Judge S. S. Fallass, the opposition nominee, he should at once take his position in the republican ranks and stay there.

Mr. Fallass is in every respect a man of the people.

His education, his livelihood—the honored position he occupies to-day—have been wrought with his own hands.

From a poor boy he has struggled alone and unaided, combating successfully the many obstacles of this life steadfastly maintaining a straight forward and honorable course in all his dealings with his fellow men.

He is respected and honored by rich and poor alike.

His nomination for the congressional seat now filled by Mr. Catcheon was unsought as was the Judge's bench he has so ably and satisfactorily occupied the past few years.

Placed there by the people, he has judged for the people.

If elected to congress, he will legislate for the people.

He is the peer of General Catcheon in everything that tends to make an upright, honest and good citizen.

And he will give his constituency no cause to blush with shame because of double dealing and political intrigue.

A young man, a democrat, brainy and energetic, and withal a clean man, the united opposition of the ninth district should see to it that Byron M. Catcheon, the scheming politician, is succeeded by the unassailable people's candidate, Hon. S. S. Fallass.—Cadillac Times.

How Judge Fallass' Nomination is Received.

Judge Fallass will make it decidedly interesting for Mr. Catcheon from now on till after election.—Grand Rapids Leader.

Judge Fallass, of Cadillac, the fusion nominee for congress, is an able and popular man, and * * * of unexceptional private character.—Luther Lance. (Rep.)

The fusionists of the ninth district have nominated Judge S. S. Fallass of Cadillac for congress. Judge Fallass is an able and popular man.—Lowell Journal. (Rep.)

A grand nomination, and one that will give Gen. Catcheon all the music he cares to pay for—Judge Fallass, the choice of the anti-republicans of the ninth district.—Big Rapids Herald.

Judge Fallass is a man of good ability, clean character and in sympathy with the advanced views of the parties making up the convention on all living questions.—Newaygo Tribune.

The election of Silas S. Fallass to congress will be the first instance in the history of this government that a workingman's candidate was elected to a seat in the American congress. But it will not be the last. Mark it. Revolutions never go backward.—Manistee Democrat.

Judge S. S. Fallass, of Cadillac, has been nominated by the democrats of the ninth district, for congress. He also was the choice of the greenback and labor convention. We are not acquainted with Judge Fallass, but think if he is anything like Fred. W. A. Fallass, his brother, who was principal of our schools some time ago, he will make it pretty up-hill work for his opponent.—Clewaning Argus.

The congressional convention in Ludington yesterday, resulted in nominating S. S. Fallass, of Cadillac, a representative man of the people, a man not only well known but admired by everyone over a broad section in western Michigan. * * * Mr. Fallass is a man the people can support without fear of future disappointment. We cordially commend him to the voters of this district.—Muskegon Workingman's Journal.

The personal appearance of Judge Fallass attracts and commands attention everywhere. He is under forty years of age, of splendid physique, weighs about two hundred pounds, has a clear, honest countenance, is possessed of fine intellectual qualities and and has a character and reputation, both public and private, that is unsullied. No act of his own has ever been questioned. He is a man of the people and for the people. As a lawyer he stands the peer of any in his district; as a judge he is known for his fairness and impartiality. In his nomination for the high office he has filled so acceptably, the man and not politics was the over-shadowing question with the people, and the lear of his district were as unanimous for his election as the great majority of the voters.—Big Rapids Herald.

Notes and News.

Cleveland continues to decline invitations to speak at great gatherings alleging that his gubernatorial duties prevent his attendance. Business first, pleasure afterward, is the doctrine practiced by our next president.—Big Rapids Herald.

App. M. Smith, formerly editor of the Manistee Times, the man to whom Gen. Catcheon owed his nomination for congress in 1882, and who did more to secure his election than any other person in the ninth district, has a "rod in pickle" for Mr. Catcheon that will place that gentleman prominently on "the ragged edge." The aforesaid "rod" is a simple straightforward story of the "inner history" of the general's last campaign. It will be watched for with interest.

Wm. H. Hurlbut, formerly editor of the New York World, now in London, cables Senator McDonald, of Indianapolis, that England favors the election of Blaine. English free trade has given her the rule of the ocean. With America's vast resources, and England's almost gone, if America adopts free trade she will rule the commerce of the world, and England must go down. Consequently England favors the election of Blaine, and the continuance of the American protective policy.

The Chicago Journal says that the effect of the first year's trial of high license in Illinois has been to wipe out of existence more than 4,000 groceries, and to increase the public revenue from that source[over $4,000,000. This has fact indicates another thing, that paying a high tax has had the effect of policing the traffic much better and hence of lessening very greatly the evils which spring from excess and drunkenness. The Journal thinks that even a prohibitory law could not so soon have shown such satisfactory results. And the Journal is a strong advocate of temperance.

By the way, what a navy is ours! Since 1865 the republican presidential administrations have expended the enormous sums of 350,000,000 on the navy. This amount of money would have built one enormous iron clad at a cost of $5,000,000, thirty powerful iron clads at a cost of $3,000,000 each, and 125 iron clads or fast sailing war ships at a cost of $2,000,000 each—a total of 156 powerful naval ships. Could the navy of Great Britain have competed with such a navy? But now what have we got for over $350,000,000? A navy that is scoffed at and blackguarded all over the world. The money has been wasted or stolen.—Schenectady Gazette.

The phrenical notion of the thick-and thin republicans, that all democrats are "mummies," is knocked endwise by the figures from the census, produced by a western journal: "Georgia and Kentucky are two staunch democratic states having the same population as Iowa, an equally staunch republican state, Georgia had but 399 men in the saloon business, and Kentucky but 1,181, while Iowa had 1,858. Massachusetts has always been a good republican state. Its population is the same as the democratic state of Texas, yet Massachusetts has twice as many saloon keepers as Texas, and so has Michigan, another republican state of about the same population. Wisconsin, a steady republican state, has about 1,300,000 inhabitants, and so has North Carolina, a democratic state. Wisconsin has 2,321 saloon keepers, while North Carolina has 171. Ohio, a republican state, with only 25 per cent more people than Indiana, a democratic state, has 50 per cent more saloon keepers, and little republican Rhode Island has three times as many saloons as little democratic Delaware.—Ex.

Where are the Irish Blaine Men.

Everywhere the Blaine appeal to Irish and Catholic voters has failed, as it deserved to fail. Mr. Michael Dougherty witily opposed this republican "dodge" in a speech in Illinois. He said:

They told me that at Macomb there was a republican club of one hundred Irishmen, formerly democrats. I went to Macomb, and they told me the club was at Monmouth. I went there, but couldn't find a single one, but was referred to Bloomington, where the republican papers stated there was a republican club of three hundred Irishmen. I went there and couldn't find them. A German sidesman told me it was at Galesburg. "Hold on, my friend," I said, "I live there." "Well, it's at Galena, then." There was a travelling man in the hotel at the time, and he said the Galena democrats would give a hundred dollars for an Irish democrat who would vote for Blaine. The eastern republican papers say the Irish Blaine clubs are in the west; the west say they are in the east; in Missouri they are in Illinois, and so it goes.—Morning News.

The People's Candidate for President,

B. F. BUTLER,

Will address the people

At Petoskey,

ON

Tuesday, October 7th.

The steamers T. S. Faxton and Clara Belle, will carry passengers at excursion rates, on Accommodation Days, Wednesdays, Oct. 1 and 8. Arrangements will be made with the inland farmers to make connections at Charlevoix with the Faxton at noon for the accommodation of parties from bowns up Pine Lake and South Arm, and bring them home on the return from Petoskey. Parties coming on the Queen of the Lakes will be met at Boyne City by the Clara Belle and Boyne City on the way up, and Advance and Traverse coming down, at regular time, to avoid unnecessary crossing of the lake.

A Butler Pole.

On Tuesday evening the Butler men raised a handsome pole 81 feet above the ground, and flung to the breeze a large Butler and West flag. The pole was furnished by Mr. McCabe, and is planted on State street in front of his store. This is the first large pole in this vicinity, and reflects credit on the party who raised it.

Communication.

EDITOR JOURNAL:

The republican papers claim that John A. Logan by a speech made in Concord during the rebellion has entirely obliterated from his record as the slavery question. Very than argument, for during those years of war a man was either a union man or a rebel. That another only question raised at that time. Now, Mr. Editor, if John A. Logan redeemed his slavery record, how can he redeem himself from his whiskey record, by making the liquor traffic our public school system in the most orderly alliance of history, by endowing the latter with the government revenue from the former, Mr. Blaine, and the republican party claims the prayers of the W. C. T. U. and reaffirms the Chicago resolution of 1872, and who in a public letter written last November to the Philadelphia press, used this language: "The proposition I have suggested gives the revenue from a specific tax—that an intoxicating liquor—and yet it does not lay a tax on the states, and does not depend upon a chance surplus or an accidental encumber in the national treasury. It makes the tax on spirituous and malt liquors a permanent resource to all the states enabling them thereby definitely to readjust and reduce their own taxation. I believe the reason ever would prove a great beneficence to the people in all parts of the republic." So the republican papers generally say to prohibitionists, let the country's curse alone, nothing for American homes for the mothers and wives who have sacrificed so much for the cause of humanity; but the republican journals have the impudence to ask the temperance people to vote with them. How does Mr. Blaine stand on the prohibition question? His action at the elections in his own state to submit the question yes or no, forms ammunition to the committee. Mr. Blaine had not the manliness to vote on the question. He dare not say yes, for he would lose the saloon vote, and he knew it. Prohibitionists cannot support a man for chief executive that is controlled by the rum traffic. Now the fact is, if Mr. Blaine and his party should interfere with the temperance question, all the promises in the land would vote against them. Stand firm ye temperance men for the prohibition party. Have as its battle cry "protection for our homes from the saloon." It frightens republicans the citizens of women, invites them to its platforms and its councils, and puts forward as its candidates men of pure purpose and heroic companionship. Remember that a vote for St. John and Daniel is not in vain. It is a fact if men would vote on the temperance question as they prayer would hold the balance of power, and Mr. St. John would be our next president. The republican papers say "will the Methodist church vote the prohibition ticket?" and then answers the question by saying, "no they love pet better meese." Its a fine compliment for the Methodist to be coupled with the republican high license whiskey party. Will the Methodist church break such an insult. Whilst they pray to God to banish intemperance from the land, I believe and hope that on the 4th day of November they will vote as they pray, and cast their votes for the prohibition cause, and to long our prayers will be answered. Three rousing cheers for St. John and Daniel.

BLAINE LAID BARE.

A Supplemental Edition of the Mulligan Letters Written by Blaine.

One of His Friends Who Advanced Him Money Wish He Did Not Return.

Anxiety of the Tattooed Knight to Assist His Companions to Establish a Bank.

Appeals to "My Dear Fisher" That Would Cause the Flinniest of Stones to Weep.

The Mulligan letters which James G. Blaine suppressed have been given to the world through the Boston papers, and are printed below.

The reason that Mr. Fisher gives for having the letters published at this time is considered it is due to the claims published for the benefit of the people of the United States. The letters have been denounced by the Blaine papers, and his imagery launched. Both Mulligan and Fisher have considered it their duty to defend themselves, and they submit the letters without comment.

To the People of the United States:

Believing that it is our duty to lay before our fellow-countrymen the following documents which have been in our possession, we have placed the originals for safe keeping in the hands of Messrs. Sohier & Welch, counselors, of Boston, who have prepared the following supplemental comment. The letters from Mr. Fisher are letter-press copies of the originals.

ALFRED A. ROBBINS, Jr., Boston.
J. G. BLAINE.

Mr. Robbins, Jr., Boston:

Dear Sir—Find inclosed draft for check in payment of balance of Fisher's subscription. I presume you will receive by same mail the 25 per cent. due on all the Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds, and also on the following: Hale Harvey, Boston, $2,000; C. W. Johnson, Belfast, $5,000; B. C. Jackson, Belfast, $2,000; E. Jackson, Belfast, $5,000; C. H. Hazelton, Belfast, $5,000. This makes $32,000 in all I have disposed of. It is beautiful! I dispose of any more, but I shall not be able to do much more, I fear. Hope you are well. No one will more rejoice than myself if you hear from me again. Please send me a receipt for Mr. Fisher's money.

Yours truly,
J. G. BLAINE.

After I received the letter in regard to Mr. Johnson, I telegraphed again, Dennis had returned, and I think the suspension was so early could not be avoided.
J. G. B.

Send only $5,000 this morning; will send $7,000 remaining to-morrow morning.

AUGUSTA, Me., Oct. 3, 1871.—My Dear Mr. Fisher: I inclose you $2,000 check, balance of A. & P. Coburn's installment; $1,000 in payment of Morrill's subscription, and $1,000 in Morrill's subscription of Lincoln County is those already advised, making in all $4,000. There may possibly be $500 more, but I expect will be less. I received yours including F. A. Hazelton's letter last Friday. Up and succeeding this you will receive a cashier's check for $7,000 in payment of Dennis' subscription, with any of the Maine subscriptions. All will come to you in cashier checks or money direct by express. I know you are anxious about the payment of any large sum of money. I fully appreciate your whole heart and kindness, and shall endeavor to be just as you desire in the matter. I have not yet decided how the Maine subscriptions can be used by you to Mr. Caldwell's advantage. I have written Mr. Caldwell about the bank, as President of Westbrook Bank of Portland, and I think he will be down to see me on Friday. Should he not, I will go to Portland the next of the steamers at Little Rock; yet it is impossible. Very kindly and truly,
J. G. BLAINE.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 3, 1871.—My Dear Fisher: Your letter of Sept. 25 was received in Augusta, and I have forwarded it to Mr. Caldwell. In regard to the bank, I fear it is too late. The session has been shortened by the Maine papers, and the inquiry launched. Both Mulligan and Fisher have considered it their duty to defend themselves, and they submit the letters without comment.

Those two letters of Oct. 4 and 5, 1871, are in continuation of the two letters of Oct. 4, 1871, which have been already published.

AUGUSTA, Me., Nov. 18, 1871.—My Dear Mr. Fisher: I received your letter of Nov. 14 on the subject of the Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds, which I have carefully read. The most of the bonds are in the hands of Mr. Caldwell, and I have written to Mr. Caldwell suggesting that in case I can arrange a meeting in this city with the holders of the bonds, I can do much more for you. I have some reason to believe that a very advantageous arrangement may be made for the sale of the bonds. I will telegraph Mr. Caldwell for Tuesday evening if I can arrange the meeting and ask him to hold himself in readiness for the journey. Your letter is this morning received, and I have not time to give you an accurate and definite statement of your financial condition and I am so confiding. I feel very sensitive with Thomas A. Scott. I assure you will not deem me unreasonable when I ask and peremptorily demand that I ought to have a note for the $2,000, and that I ought also to have the money for the bonds placed to my account as Mr. Caldwell the cashier hands me of the $25,000 loan. I do not believe your company is a stronger or more equitable and just either than mine, while its personal liabilities to me are little or nothing, and mine are made by the last degree. Sincerely yours friend,
J. G. BLAINE.

Warren Fisher, Jr., Esq.

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS, UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C., April 21, 1871.—My Dear Mr. Caldwell: On the 20th inst. the interest of the loan I contracted in December last falls due. The money I borrowed of you to pay the interest I am compelled to meet it. I drew on Mr. Fisher for the money, but he declines to honor the draft. The note which falls due on the 20th inst. is for $2,000, and I have written to Mr. Fisher not suppose that I should be compelled to pay the interest on the loan, but I find I have a little of Fredericton City bonds left on hand, and I cannot believe that you and Mr. Fisher, both of whom I have assisted in the sale of some of them, all the securities, in accordance with your request, will not be able to find a purchaser for them. Can you not manage the negotiation of the bond, and that you have received the money? I presume you will be well satisfied under the Eastern contracts when the road is completed. I am very anxious, and think you can easily see that I have some reason for being so, that I should be able to meet the interest on the loan. I have written to Mr. Fisher to-day, and I hope you will do what little of your obligations to deliver bonds to be sold. Perhaps I can do more for you if I have some bonds on hand. Yours truly and sincerely,
J. G. BLAINE.

Send me Mr. Fisher's letter in regard to Mr. Johnson's bond.

Jonah Caldwell, Esq.

NO. 1 PEMBERTON SQUARE, BOSTON, April 25, 1871.—My Dear Mr. Blaine: Your favor of 21st inst. came to hand yesterday, and I have seen Mr. Fisher this afternoon. I hope you can be here on Friday or Saturday. The money in Blaine is an important sum to us to have. Mr. Fisher and myself are anxious that you should be so situated that I could help him. Yours truly,
JONAH CALDWELL.

This letter is in answer to Mr. Blaine's letter to Caldwell of April 21, 1871.

AUGUSTA, Me., June 11, 1871.—My Dear Mr. Fisher: I shall be in Boston next week, probably before Monday and Tuesday is my day. On Wednesday I have promised to be at Portland, and I think, growing out of my connection with the Little Rock and Fort Smith bonds, I shall have to be paid into your company about $15,000, and I shall be able to place the money in your hands in a few days. The most painful of all my most painful days of life was that in which I was compelled to use your money for my own credit on the distinct understanding that the money I was to use for you, I was also to receive a certain proportion of the profits. I tried very hard to do it, and I thought I could succeed, but I failed. I shall be able to place the money in your hands in a few days

A $3 Poem.

I have been shown your paper sir, in which
You say you'll pay
Three dollars for the poorest poem sent till the fifteenth day
Of April. Now I can get no poor poetry
With just as little trouble as the squirrels go up a tree.

When Widow Johnson's barn was burnt some think 'twas set afire
From sparks from over across the lot, where they were setting tires;
The time she lost her little boy, whom cruel fate did snatch,
The neighbors kindly set about to help her raise another.

They made her a donation call and made me
do the speechifying,
The folks were tickled, and declared 'twas
high as good as preaching;
And when we sung the piece I wrote, ten voices, common nothing,
And which I gave out line by line—sah
nothing could be sweeter.

As like as not this poetry will be too good by half,
As some you get may be so bad it would make the horses laugh.
But never mind, if you feel pleased whenever you read this sketch,
Remember the book says: "Put not thy trust in riches."
—Josh Beston, in Rockland Courier-
Gazette.

Marshal Ney.

The Kansas City Times recently contained an article on Marshal Ney, giving evidence in support of the theory of his American birth, and alludes to his career in France as follows:

In France Ney joined the army, and fought as a private under the great Napoleon. Egypt, Toulon, the reign of terror, the convulsion, Marengo, and Austerlitz, the first empire and the one hundred days, are some of the scenes of this stirring period with which the young hero must have been familiar. His heart was broken by his wife's supposed treachery and dishonor. His soul was fired with an ambition for military glory, and he fought with the desperation of one who courts death, and who has everything to win and nothing to lose in this life.

At that time very few of the French soldiers could write. During the heat of a terrific battle, the story goes, Napoleon wanted to send a dispatch. For the moment his aides had left or been separated from him. He turned to a corps near him.

"Can any of you write?"

Private Ney touched his cap.

"Come to my quarters."

Napoleon dictated a dispatch. As the private sat writing a ball from the enemy's cannon tore through the tent and exploded between the general and his improvised secretary, plowing up the ground at their feet. Ney never looked up nor moved a muscle, but, finishing the line, shook the sand from the paper, and handing it to Napoleon, said:

"They have saved me the trouble of sanding (blotting) the dispatch."

Napoleon could only gaze on the unconcerned youth: man with admiration, and exclaimed: "The bravest of the brave!"

From that time Ney's advancement was very rapid.

The matters here given are not supposed to be strictly historical, but are given as remembered by one who heard them from the mouths of men who knew the actors in their lifetime.

After the fall of Napoleon and his banishment to Elba, Marshal Ney, and the other great generals of the fallen hero, was released on parole. Then came the escape from Elba and the one hundred days. Ney and Murat and the other great marshals flocked to the standard of the little giant. Where was their word of parole to bear arms no more against England and the allies now?

What next? Waterloo. The treachery or imbecility of Grouchy. Napoleon's defeat! St Helena for Napoleon. Court martial and death for Ney, the brave Murat and the rest.

Before he was shot, Ney confessed to the judge advocate, who would fain have defended him, that he was an American subject. To his sons he said that his name was Rudolph, and that he had abandoned their mother and left her in America.

On his trial, the judge advocate exclaimed: "If I can save Marshal Ney by no other means, I now declare that he is not a Frenchman, but——"

"Hold!" cried the great general. "If I die I will die as a Frenchman. Let the past be buried with me!"

He died as he had lived. Murat, the brother-in-law of Napoleon and king of Naples, begged that the soldiers would spare his face. He was a very handsome man and proud of his locks, though as brave as a lion.

Ney drew himself up to his full, folded his arms, declined to have his eyes bandaged, and said:

"Fire where you will. I have faced death too many times to fear it now."

"Ready! Aim!"—a long, level row of muskets pointing at the doomed men

"Fire!" A streak of fire runs along the line, a puff of smoke, a report, and the soul of the brave Ney had gone to join its maker.

Simple Home Remedies.

The following remedies for many simple ailments we find recommended in Hall's Journal of Health. And while the remedies may not be new to many of our readers they will be found useful to all. We now publish them that they may be at hand for ready reference.

Half a teaspoonful of common table salt dissolved in a little cold water and drank will instantly relieve "heart burn," or dyspepsia. If taken in the morning before breakfast, increasing the quantity gradually to a teaspoonful of salt and a tumbler of water, it will in a few days cure any ordinary case of dyspepsia, if at the same time due attention is paid to the diet. There is no better remedy than the shove for constipation. As a gargle for sore throat it is equal to chlorate of potash, and is entirely safe. It may be used as often as desired, and if a little is swallowed each time, it will have a beneficial effect on the throat by cleansing it in allaying the irritation. In doses of one to four teaspoonfuls in half a pint of tepid water it acts promptly as an emetic, and, in case of poisoning, is always on hand. It is an excellent remedy for bites and stings of insects. It is a valuable astringent in cases of hemorrhage, particularly for bleeding after the extracting of teeth. It has both cleansing and healing properties, and is therefore a most excellent application for superficial ulcerations. Mustard is another valuable remedy. No family should be without it. Two or three teaspoonsful of ground mustard stirred into half a pint of water acts as an emetic very promptly and is milder and easier to take than salt and water. Equal parts of ground mustard and flour or meal made into a paste with warm water and spread on a thin piece of muslin, with another piece of muslin laid over it, forms the indispensible "mustard plaster." It is almost a specific for the cholic when applied for a few minutes over the "pit of the stomach." For all internal pains and congestions there is no remedy of such general utility. It acts as a counter-irritant by bringing the blood to the surface; hence in severe cases of croup a small mustard plaster should be applied to the back of the child's neck. The same kind of treatment will relieve almost any case of headache. A mustard plaster should be moved about over the spot to be acted upon, for if left in one place it is liable to blister. A mustard plaster acts equally as well when at considerable distance from the affected part. An excellent substitute for mustard plaster is what is known as "mustard leaves." They come a dozen in a box, and are about four by five inches. They are perfectly dry, and will keep for a long time. For use it is only necessary to dip one in a dish of water for a minute and then apply it. Common baking soda is the best of all remedies in cases of burns and scalds. It may be used on the surface of the burned place either wet or dry. When applied promptly, the sense of relief is magical. It seems to withdraw the heat and with it the pain, and the healing process soon commences. It is the best application for eruptions caused by poisonous ivy and other poisonous plants, as also for bites and stings of insects. Owing to colds, over-fatigue, anxiety and other causes, the urine is often scanty, highly colored, and more or less loaded with phosphates which settle to the bottom of the vessel on cooling. As much soda as can be tipped up on a ten cent piece, dissolved in half a glass of cold water and drank every three hours, will soon remedy the trouble.

A Good Farm for Sale

As Others See Us.

Some weeks ago, Mr. W. E. Osborn editor of the Antwerp (Ohio) Argus, accompanied the excursion on the Friant from Petoskey to Boyne, stopping half an hour in Charlevoix. Below is an extract from his paper dated Sept. 11th, giving his report of the trip:

On Friday last, one hundred and thirty five pleasure seekers—your humble servant among the number—boarded the beautiful little steamer, Thos. Friant, for a trip to Charlevoix and Boyne City. Charlevoix is a charming village, eighteen miles south from Petoskey, on lake Michigan and at the mouth of Pine river, and has a population of nearly two thousand. Pine river is the outlet of Pine lake; is about half a mile in length and sufficiently broad and deep to permit the passage of the largest lake vessels. The scenery in and around the place is exceedingly romantic. Passing through the river you enter Round lake, a pretty little sheet of water covering about thirty acres. From this you enter Pine lake, one of the most delightful in this region. It is eighteen miles long and nearly six miles wide. Charlevoix, situated on this beautiful lake, is a delightful summer resort, and has much in common with the other places in this delightful region, such as its pure air, clear water, and an ample supply of the choicest fish from the lake and trout streams. Its situation, between lake Michigan on the north and west, and Pine lake on the east, makes it pre eminently a choice place for a summer residence. With scarcely a single day through all the hot summer months, a refreshing breeze blows either from the one or the other of these two sheets of water. After a halt of our excursion party for half an hour, at this lovely retreat, we steamed out into the lake, and bound for Boyne city, (so named), distance seventeen miles, and situated at the head of Pine lake, and at the mouth of Boyne river. Boyne is a little village of about 300 population, and has no particular inducements to offer, as a resort for "hay fever" sufferers, as our two hours sojourn there indicated, although we cannot refrain from speaking in terms of praise, of the United States hotel, where our party were most royally entertained, and all "aching void" appeased. We were convinced that J. J. Stevens, the gentlemanly proprietor, knew how to keep a hotel. At this place is found three excellent hotels, one but recently erected by H. B. Chapman, from Reading, Mich., is the largest in this section, it having cost to build and furnish, upwards of forty thousand dollars. While at Boyne, the air was inland, and the day being a very warm one, our party were heartily glad when our little steamer was once more turned homeward. On our return, we made a short stop at Ironton where is located a blast furnace, for the purpose of manufacturing pig iron. These works are operated by a Chicago company, and when in full blast, give employment to about 600 men. The ore is brought by boat from lake Superior, and the fuel is shipped mostly to Chicago. On our return trip we made another stop of half an hour at Charlevoix, where I had the pleasure of making the acquaintance of Major E. B. Green, present county treasurer, and custom house collector. He is also commander of G. A. R. post of this place, and during our short with him, he proved himself a very pleasing gentleman. At Charlevoix is located the Baptist summer resort, which was organized in 1878, by parties from Kalamazoo, Mich. This company owns seventy-five acres on the east side of Pine lake, and its northern boundry being the waters of Round lake.

Old Block Makes a Convert.

Good morning, how are you going to vote this election?

I shall vote the prohibition ticket, national and state, score right to the line sir.

You'll throw your vote away!

I know republican papers say so, but a vote for principle is never thrown away.

Yes, I know, but you give Cleveland a half vote.

I don't care what you say about that. I had rather throw my vote into a stream of pure water, than vote for the republican candidates, even if it is half Cleveland as you say. But honest neighbor, it would be a good thing if the republicans were defeated at this election. Then the temperance men who have not courage to leave the party now, would come over to the prohibition cause, and in '88 we would elect our whole ticket.

But it would not do to do away with high license. It is such a source of revenue to the government!

Then you admit that the license system is right and prohibition wrong.

No, not that exactly, but we can't do without the revenue in our national treasury.

Oh I see, then you would protect the republican party and the rum traffic to the time of $700,000,000 spent annually for rum, to recruit an army of 60,000 drunkards a year, and not consider the misery and want of as many wives and children of the drunkard, besides the crime growing out of the whiskey curse.

Well, I know that looks bad, but never thought it half so bad as you picture it, but I don't see how we are to get the revenue to run the election if with if you prohibit whiskey.

Now let's talk about that whiskey revenue business. Where does all the revenue come from that is derived from the sale of whiskey?

Well I never thought of that.

Why, my dear sir, it comes from the people, for they buy the whiskey. The government gets only one dollar, in every ten, and the saloon keeper gets nine dollars of the people's money, so you see the republican party makes the saloon keeper the agent, to collect the revenue from the people. Don't you think your party are rather poor financiers? Would it not be better to have prohibition and let the people keep the extra nine dollars in their pockets.

Well I declare, Mr. it does look sorter that way, but I heard our minister say he was a Blaine man and some how I thought he was right, as I always had great faith in him as a minister.

No doubt neighbor you did, and it's well to follow your minister when he's right, but when he's wrong and you are convinced of the fact, don't follow him. I heard your minister make a rousing prohibition speech and I heard him pray to God that the time would speedily come that rum would be banished from the land and that temperance, peace and plenty should reign supreme.

Yes I heard him make that same prayer.

Well, what do you think of a man who preaches the gospel of Christ to his fellows and exhorts them to be temperate and sober-minded, and work for God and humanity, that would by his example vote and encourage others to do so, with a party who sanctions high license for the whiskey crime? Would you not regard him as a hypocrite and a fraud, so far as his christianity goes?

Well Mr. I certainly should.

Then neighbor, let me say to you, what is morally wrong is not religious by or politically right.

That's a fact Mr., and here's my hand that I will vote for St. John and Daniel.

Neighbor, I have been pleased to converse with you, and remember that the only issue of the day is prohibition.

Is Our Civilization Perishable.

A moral cause which may threaten our civilization is a mistaken view of the relations between capital and labor. This cause presents a double aspect, according as capital is found to be too grasping or labor to be too exacting. It is not now for the first time that conflicts bringing grave dangers to society have arisen between these two great forces. From the obscure hints which history gives us it is evident that with the nature and extent of the respective rights of labor and capital are not well understood, and the weaker party, the laborer, laboring poor, often bore long without seeking redress, a time was generally reached in which the limit of forbearance was passed and terrible outbreaks, worse than any experienced in the present day, occurred. The servile insurrections of classical antiquity, the peasant wars of the middle ages in France, Germany and England, are examples of this. It is noticeable however, that these outbreaks of violence were limited in extent. The disease being local, recovery was possible, and it came from voluntary concessions by the capitalists of the period. Labor arose in rebellion because it suffered, and, the oppression being removed, quiet and contentment were restored. If the causes were strictly local, the same phenomenon might again be witnessed. Such now, however, is the solidarity of all civilized peoples that causes of discontent in the ranks of labor are likely to be universal, even when they are material in their nature, so that the danger from that source is greater than in former times. But the causes are not all of that kind; there are causes in the principles propounded by the parties to the conflict, as determining their respective rights, which, because they fly upon the wings of the wind all over the whole earth, are all the more menacing to civilization. One of those on the part of capital is the principle that there are no limits beyond which capital ought not to be allowed to accumulate; or that corporations cannot rightfully be controlled in the exercise of their charter powers; or that while monopolies, strictly so called, are illegal, virtual monopolies, entailing upon a people all the evils of real monopolies, ought not to be disturbed in gathering their colossal harvest of gain.—Judge John A. Jameson, in North American.

The Rounds Type Company, of Chicago, made an assignment for the benefit of its creditors. Liabilities, $13,000; assets, $20,000.

Judge Hayes, in his charge to the Grand Jury at Muscatine, Iowa, the other day, said that the liquor of intoxicating liquor was as much amenable to the law as the vendor; hence persons who purchased intoxicants could not be compelled to give information against liquor dealers as that would criminate themselves. He also advised that associations which sent prosecutors to purchase liquor for the purpose of securing evidence for a prosecution may be indicted for conspiracy. If Judge Hayes' views are upheld it will be impossible to enforce the Prohibitory law in Iowa.

The Chicago Times of the 1st inst. says: "One of the greatest corners ever engineered on the Chicago Board of Trade reached its culmination for the month yesterday, when September corn was lifted up to $1 per bushel. When the corner was passed there was a short interest of 11,000,000 bushels, nearly one-third of which is still in default. No one seems to know who furnished the cash required to conduct an operation of such magnitude. Unless the corner can be perpetuated for twelve thereafter reason to suspect that the manipulators will meet heavy losses. It is rumored that Wall street operators were the principal sufferers by the corner."

Democratic Representative Convention.

A democratic representative convention will be held at Petoskey, on Tuesday, Oct 14, 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating a representative in the state legislature for the district comprising the counties of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it. Each county is entitled to six delegates.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

Republican County Convention.

For some days the various candidates for republican honors have been button-holing every delegate to the county convention as soon as elected or possible to reach them, and the air has been full of possible combinations against the slate made by the managers. Long before the hour of the convention it became apparent that some good men would have to be slaughtered to get them out of the way. And the day was appropriate for the work,—dark and gloomy.

There was some delay in bringing the contending factions to order, but it was finally accomplished and the fight began.

The first struggle was over the naming of temporary chairman. Dr. Lewis nominated John Ward of Marion, but before the motion could be seconded and put F. E. Fogg of South Arm nominated J. C. McFollin of Evangeline. A division of the house was called for, and the Charlevoix faction was slapped in face by the defeat of Ward and the election of McFollin. To appease the rising wrath of the defeated faction, Dr. S. C. Graves was made temporary secretary. On these officers depended the appointment of the committees, and the settling of contested seats.

A brief recess was taken to allow the committee on credentials to make their report. When made it ruled out delegate Moore of Boyne Valley, and secured the slate nomination for judge of probate.

The report of the committee on organization made the temporary organization permanent.

After the settlement of minor details the balloting commenced.

For judge of probate J. A. Kent of South Arm received 19 votes to 13 for Wm. Mears of Boyne Valley, on the first informal ballot, and this was declared unanimous by acclamation.

For register of deeds, F. J. Meech of Norwood received 26 votes, and was declared the nominee.

For county clerk, S. B. Thatcher of Springvale received 29 votes, which was practically unanimous.

For prosecuting attorney there were two ballots. On the first, Fred W. Mayne received 14 votes, and R. L. Corbett 18. On the second ballot, one vote changed from Mayne to Corbett, and the latter was declared nominated.

For sheriff there were five ballots. On the first A. J. Stroud received 17 votes, Richard Cooper 6, A. J. McLeod 6, Harrison Berdan 3. Stroud's majority over all was glory enough for him,—it was a sufficient endorsement of his administration,—and to avoid a certain defeat at the polls, he withdrew his name from the convention. On the last ballot Berdan received 18 votes, to 13 for Frank Myers, and one for Cooper.

For treasurer there were three live candidates, two of whom have been planning for months. The slate was broken on the fifth ballot. On the first, Byron See received 10 votes, W. C. Newman 11, and J. Reed Emery 11. Emery gained on each ballot, the last standing Emroy 18, Newman 7, See 6.

For circuit court commissioner, F. E. Fogg was nominated by acclamation, as was also E. K. Robinson for surveyor, and Drs. Graves and Sanderson for coroners.

In an attempt to appease the rightous indignation of Fred Mayne, in salt was added to disappointment by naming him for chairman of the county committee, to plant the election of the ticket, a portion of which he had labored early and late, in caucus and convention, to defeat.

Butler at Petoskey.

Tuesday was a great day for Petoskey. A vast concourse of people from the surrounding country assembled to see and hear Gen. B. F. Butler, the people's candidate for president. The morning promised rain, which doubtless prevented many others from attending.

About seven hundred Butler men were in the procession, and it was estimated that there were four or five thousand people in the vicinity of the speaker's stand.

While waiting for the special train bearing Ben. Butler, Gov. Begole, and the party in attendance, speeches were made by Messrs. Hudson, of Mancelona, Hill, of Boyne, Bartlett, of Hayes, and Hampton, of Harbor Springs. It was expected that S. O. Fisher, candidate for congress in the tenth district, would also be in attendance, but a failure to make connections at Mackinac prevented.

Gen. Butler arrived at 4.30, and was driven about the principal streets of Petoskey, then to the speaker's stand, where he talked about thirty minutes, in the interests of the people's party, of which he is the founder and chief promoter. There is no doubt but he made many converts by his frank and forcible exposition of the needs of the workingman, whose cause he especially champions. His views on the tariff, if strictly followed would no doubt work a solution of this most vexed question.

At the conclusion of Butler's remarks, Gov. Begole was introduced, but did not make any extended remarks.

The party then repaired to the Occidental hotel for supper and a reception.

The Charlevoix party then returned home, and we do not know what the further program was, except that the party were to go to Mackinac and Cheboygan for an evening meeting.

The success of this meeting is due largely to the fine management of C. S. Hampton, of the Harbor Springs Independent, who seemed to know what to do, when to do, and how to do everything,—even to talking against time while waiting for the train. Hampton's executive ability is most remarkable.

Notes and News.

True prohibitionists are everywhere deserting the republican party. This "artful dodger," James G. Blaine, drove thousands of honest voters into the ranks of the St. John party by his cowardly refusal to vote on the prohibitory amendment in Maine.

Grover Cleveland has too much business at home to permit him to swing around the circle making political speeches. His motto, apparently is business first, pleasure afterwards. And such a man we want to look after the people's business affairs at Washington.

Department Commander Rush J. Shank, of Lansing, in general order No. 5, says: "It is reported that comrades in various sections of the state are wearing the badge of the order on their coats by the side of political badges, thus implying that they, as Grand Army men, will support this or that candidate for office. Comrades, this practice cannot be condemned in too pronounced a manner. If we—as an order—are to maintain our present high standing, we must keep it disconnected from all political organizations. Comrades, don't display your G. A. R. badge by the side of political badges or emblems. Don't attend political meetings as posts or with your badge in a prominent position. Don't assume to speak for the order when you announce your own political preference. Remember that the G. A. R. is composed of comrades entertaining various views, all having equal rights as citizens and soldiers."—Ex.

Cleveland's welcome at Buffalo last week was one of the grandest demonstrations of the summer. Fifty thousand people standing in a drizzling rain to welcome a man charged with such a crime as he was, and this, too, right at the home of the man and the scene of the alleged misconduct, looks more like a complete vindication by his own people than anything else. The people at Cleveland's home evidently do not believe the dirty slanders circulated about him.

A fac simile of the Kennebec Journal of August, 1856, shows that James G. Blaine and James Baxter were its editors; that it carried the names of Millard Fillmore and Andrew Jackson Donaldson as candidates for president and vice-president; and below the ticket the words "Free home for Americans on guard!" Blaine therefore was not a republican supporting Fremont, but a Know-nothing, supporting the Know-nothing ticket. Carry the news to the Irish!

The republican party is like a last year's onion in springtime,—so nearly rotten that it stinks. But plant it—bury it out of sight in good ground,—and in a short time from out its heart will spring new and tender shoots (sweet to the taste of the laborer at his noonday meal) which, if properly cultivated, will become large and strong. Bury the party this year, and from its heart will spring a party, if properly cultivated, that will revolutionize American politics.

What Fusion Will Do.

Nothing ever done in politics in this country has so thoroughly bewildered politicians as has the bold, straggle movement of Gen. Butler in carrying into actual practice the tendency of his mind to "fight with the under dog." Take for instance the state of Michigan. It is hopeless by republicans. Its officers and lawmakers have grown to be arrogant and contemptuous of the rights of the minority. To-day, when it is apparent that the minority (democrats) and the independent (people's) vote has a reasonable prospect of success it is remarkable and remarked how deferential the republican press is toward Gen. Butler. That side of the house feel his force and calmly avoid stirring it up. The effect in Michigan will be that the rights of the minority will be considered and respected.—Father Columbia's Paper.

Prohibition must win. And if it does, the event will simply be history repeating itself. The liberty party of 1840-4, which supported J. G. Birney, for president, was the seed from which grew the abolition party under the name "republican." Millions of dollars in property (slaves) were at stake then, as the millions of "manufacturing interests" are now. The whig party was divided against itself, and it fell. The new party built on its ruins combined men favorable to that cause from every existing party. But not until "abolition" was dropped, and a milder name adopted. Here the prohibition party can hope to control the government, they must organize with a party name less objectionable. Their principles and aims may be the same as now, but the name must not represent the extreme. Voters must be led along and educated gradually. Emancipation so finally accomplished would have been repudiated by the men who elected Abraham Lincoln, in 1860, if they could have known exactly what was coming. The republican party to-day divided against itself, and is in the throes of dissolution; it will fall as did its predecessor, and upon its ruins will be built a party embodying its best features, with prohibition as its chief mission, but its name must be so toned down that its extreme mission will not be apparent to the average voter.

BANK OF CHARLEVOIX

Receives Deposits of TEN CENTS AND UPWARD

REASONS—First, we have $40,000 in Land, Buildings, Furniture, Vaults and Safes, Stock in Some Savings Banks, or other State Bonds, offer no excuse for deposits beyond amount of stock taken; and that is often fictitious. National banks do not speculate; holding that with our money it is foolish, and with our friends it is criminal.

E. H. Green chanced to be in the room when the greenback camera was organized Saturday evening, and he was unanimously elected to preside. Of course he declined.

Mr. Trowbridge, who lectured at the opera house Sunday evening on "Turkish mission," was greeted by a full house, and the discourse seemed to give excellent satisfaction.

On Tuesday afternoon before the convention came to order, at least one republican candidate was seen on his knees before a delegate,—it is presumed imploring him for support.

The needs of Charlevoix will be kept in view at Washington, by Judge Fallass, and if it is possible, our appropriations will be at a figure proportionate to the needs of the harbor.

Judge Fallass will get the support of at least two staunch republicans in Charlevoix county, who believe in his ability to represent this district as well if not better than any other man before the people.

Historical Society.

The annual meeting of the Historical Society was held at the parlors of Mrs. E. H. Green, Tuesday evening.

The society adjourned after passing a very pleasant time, to meet on Tuesday evening next, at the parlors of the Bridge street house, at which time will occur the annual election of officers. A full attendance is greatly desired as there will be important business to transact.

AL. T. WAGBURN, Secretary.

The Doctors in Council.

Last Friday afternoon the physicians of Charlevoix county organized a County Medical Society, with the following officers:

President—Dr. David C. Chamberlain, of Norwood.

First Vice President—Dr. Levi Lewis, of Charlevoix.

Second Vice President—Dr. Estelle Long, of Bay Springs.

Secretary and Treasurer—Dr. Schuyler Graves, of Charlevoix.

A committee was appointed to draft a constitution and bylaws, which will be presented for adoption at the next meeting of the society, Nov. 7th.

The balance of the session was devoted to the discussion of matters of interest closely to the profession.

In the evening, the doctors with their wives assembled at the parlors of the Bridge Street House, and after a brief season of social intercourse, repaired to the dining room where a specially-prepared banquet was in waiting. The following will perhaps give a fair idea of the good things spread before the assembled guests:

MOTT.
Oyster.
COLD DISHES.
Raw Oysters. Sliced Ham. Sliced Chicken, Sliced Turkey, garnished with lemon.
RELISHES.
Cucumber Pickles. Sweet Spiced Apples.
FRUITS.
Apples. Grapes. Pears. Peaches. Bananas.
PASTRY AND DESSERT.
Assorted Cake. Cranberry. Boiled Biscuit. Lemon Ice Cream. Vanilla Ice Cream. Tea. Coffee.

After the banqueters had satisfied the cravings of the physical system, Dr. Graves, as toast master, reminded them that there was also a mental feast in store.

Dr. Chamberlain, as president of the association, responded in a few pleasing words to the toast, "Welcome to our guests."

"The Medical Profession in General, and the Charlevoix County Association in Particular," was responded to by Dr. Chisholm, in which he feelingly portrayed various phases of a physician's life.

"Tanner Methodist, or Physic as it was Practiced in this County Fifteen Years Ago," was responded to by Dr. Lewis. Like all other pioneers, he physicians meets of equal instrumental obstacles. He "s.o. ended to know every thing and do every thing, with very limited resources, and to take his pay in the currency of the country, whatever happens to be most convenient in the way of "sticks."

"The Lancet." This was responded to by Dr. Preston in his usual happy manner.

"The Dose." This was responded to briefly by Chas. J. Strang, of the JOURNAL.

After the banquet, the party assembled in the parlor, where an hour or more was passed in social conversation.

The day as a whole is an event in Charlevoix history, long to be remembered by the participants. May its anniversary in coming years be honored with like results.

Communication.

A scurrilous article which appeared in last week's Sentinel requires some notice. If the author of the Sentinel could see so much dishonesty in "Jim's" speeches, why did not he or some other smart speaker of the Blaine party come up and confound him while he was making speeches in this vicinity, and not wait until he had gone far away before commencing his abuse and misrepresentation. The statements of Hartshell needing his dollar's work and hoarding around is an absolute falsehood, as I have means of knowing. Such lies and such abuse of an honest man will not help the plumed knight's party.

The Calcium Light of Calm Logic Thrown Upon His Unsavory Record.

Convicted by His Own Words and Writing of Deliberate Falsehoods.

The Tattooed Man Fittingly Compared to the English Gift-Taker, Lord Bacon.

Blaine's Political Record Exhibited in the Fullness of Its Corruption.

An Earnest and Eloquent Plea for Official and National Honor.

Carl Schurz's Great Detroit Speech.

When I assert that the Republican party has demonstrated its unfitness for the Presidency until the Republican party shall have shown that it can purge itself of the corruption which has grown up under its long tenure of power, I do not mean that it can purge itself of its patriotic traditions, of its honor, of its love of liberty and of its religious zeal. The old engine I hate for this purpose the Republican party has worn out on the wheels, been very careful in keeping the wheels in splendid repair, and has been always anxious to see it falling the position we will, I hope, see it filling in the future.

The Mulligan letters, I am ready to say, last until yesterday, when the second sample of them was published, and had not learned from a Republican edition what I should find in them. I have read them, and I say to you that the Mulligan letters contain less of the freshness, less of the vigor, less of the indication of a man who expressed the thought that is inside him so much more made to cap the mark, and not so much to prove that I should not call upon each the third time, I shall call to the attention of the audience, the third of this letter, because, a man is so most accurately drawn by himself. I can, without any hesitation, say that Mr. Blaine has anybody else, and that is Mr. Blaine himself.

In October, upon a case of the Union Pacific Railroad Company having purchased a lot of little lands and two month bonds, and having paid therefor the sum of papers. That lot of bonds, it was said, was worth in Boston at the time one something like fifteen or twenty thousand dollars. The lot of little bonds came Mr. Blaine, and that the $6,200 had passed into his hands; and that, in consideration of a commission of some yearly income then the real value of the bonds, it might have been supposed that the payment Mr. Blaine, Mr. Blaine, Mr. Blaine had done some other kind service to the Pacific Railroad. The secretary saw several actions to this that, on the 20th day of April, 1876, he sent to his seat in the House of Representatives and made an explanation of the matter. He said that he had no place there, he was not in the House of Representatives and made an explanation of the matter. He said that he had no place there, he was not in the second place, that the owning of the bonds was entirely from the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and in the second place, that the owning of the little bonds was entirely from Mr. Blaine, because the Little Rock Railroad had always been in the hands of Mr. Blaine, and that the Union Pacific

Grandma's Angel.

'Mamma said: 'Little one, go and see
If Grandmother's ready to come to tea.'
I knew I mustn't disturb her, so
I stepped as gently along, (tiptoe,
And stood a moment to take a peep—
And there was Grandmother fast asleep!

'I knew it was time for her to wake;
I thought I'd give her a little shake,
Or (aside) her door or softly call;
But I'd at the heart for that at all—
She looked so sweet and so quiet there,
Lying back in her high armchair,
With her dear face (I'm sure it's little smile,
That means she's looking you all the while.

'It did n't make a speck of a noise;
I knew she was dreaming of little boys
And girls who lived will her long ago,
And then went to Heaven—she told me so.

'I went up close, and I did n't speak
Or stir at all, for I'd peep for cheek
The serious bit of a little face,
Just in a whisper, and then said (the Grandmother dear, It's time for tea.'

'She opened her eyes and looked at me,
And said, 'Why, Pet, I have just now Dreamed
Of a little angel who came and seemed
To kiss me lovingly on my face,'
She paused right at the very place!

'I never told her 'twas only me;
I took her hand, and we went to tea.'
—Sydney Dayre, in St. Nicholas for April.

Eclectic Diet.

The Alta Californian says: The half-dozen cranks who for the sake of notoriety, are promoting a rare vegetable-eating association, held a mutual admiration society the other day. Before the meeting commenced an angular female with a complexion something like a well-worn saddle that had been out in the rain, took it upon herself to interview an Alta reporter. She commenced by asking his name, age, occupation, salary, and mode of life, and, on being informed that he was an Irish nobleman in disguise, working on the Alta for $1,000 a month, she demanded to know why the Alta had not paid more attention to the "Eclectic diet," as she was pleased to style raw turnips and other cattle food. The reporter replied that the Eclectic scheme had been somewhat frowned down by the Alta editors because the promoters of the scheme were not consistent.

"Now you see real mean to say we are not thoroughly consistent. We never eat any animal food and never cook anything," replied the rather disengaged looking vestal.

"You claim to follow the example of our first parents as an excuse for relapsing into the savage habits of the Digger Indians; if they consider the example of Adam and Eve so good in one way, then why not in another? Why don't you go in for the whole of the Eden business?" asked the reporter.

"What do you mean, sir?" asked the pioneer damsel, looking about the same as the girl who finds that the long-wished-for-sealskin given her by Augustus is one of the Cara street brand.

"If you admire the Eden style of grub so much, why don't you tackle the Eden costume, too? Discard your drapery and idiu-eased skirts, and prance around in a fig-leaf apron. Thus would suit your style of beauty about as well as raw potatoes and wheat will an ordinary christian stomach," replied the reporter.

"What, no walk around nearly n—? Oh, its too horrid! Besides I should be arrested by the police, and then, think, too, all the weavers and spinners and milliners would be ruined," rejoined the female, frately.

"Can't you have as much regard for the cooks, waiters, bakers and restaurateurs as you have for milliners and such?" asked the reporter.

"Oh, it's no use arguing with you. I see; you scoff at everything you don't understand," said the Eclectic promoter as she closed the interview and the door with simultaneous bangs.

Autograph-Hunters.

When the autograph craze first began the disease was of a mild type. The collector was modestly content with a signature. That no longer satisfies. He wants a letter addressed to him personally—on any subject you please," as a youthful fiend wrote to me the other day! He wishes to barter his letter in the faces of his inspiring acquaintances, in order to prove that he is on familiar terms with the celebrated So-and-So. The devices he employs to achieve this end are ingenious and inexhaustible. For example, he drops you a line to inquire in what year you first printed your beautiful poem entitled A Psalm of Life. If you are a simple soul, you hasten to assure him that you are not the author of that poem, which he must have confused with your Ritos of the Ancient Mariner—and there you are! The insidious one knew very well that you didn't write the Psalm of Life. Another trick is to inquire of you if your father's middle name was not Hieropulus, but Epaminondas—and there you are again!

A still more offensive, because disillusioning, stratagem is that of the correspondent who informs you that he is replenishing his library, and requests a detailed list of your works, with the respective dates of their publication, prices, etc. This has an air of business. The inference is that the correspondent, who writes in a brisk, commercial manner, wishes to fill out his collection of your books, or possibly to purchase a complete set in crushed Levant morocco. Say not that flattering inference to thy soul, thou too unworthy dreamer! A year or so later this same person, having forgotten that he has already demanded a chronological list of your writings, sends you another application, couched in the selfsame words! The length of time it takes him to "replenish" his library (with your works) is something patriotic. This particular species of autographic hunter probably does not care a copper for your autograph from a literary point of view. From a mercantile point of view he cares a great deal, and likes to get three or four copies a year, for he compiles small volumes of autographs, and sells them. It must be a poor trade, however. If the same amount of persistence and industry it demands of him were put into a corner-grocery, he would speedily make his fortune.—April Atlantic.

Which Way do You Circle?

One generally sends that persons walking without land-marks perform a large circle and cut their old tracks again. This circling, as far as my present knowledge goes, is to the left.

My present theory is that in most persons the right leg is the stronger and the more forward to step over any obstacles, and hence that it slightly outwalks the left; this theory involving as further consequences that those in whom the left leg is the stronger would circle to the right, while those whose legs are of equal strength would either keep straight on, or would wander either way indefinitely. I imagine this "outwalking" of one leg by the other to be similar to the manner in which a body of troops wheels to one side or the other.

In the following I use the expression 'right-legged.' By this I mean that the right leg is that chosen to kick with, jump from, etc.

My negative evidence is as follows:

1. I myself am right-legged, and in a mist I always circle to the left. I have only once across cases similar to my own in these respects. On the other hand, my left arm has been broken (by always rowing on the bow side) to be stronger than my right for rowing purposes; and in sculling I always circle to my right side.

2. Those savages of whom I have read that they could keep a straight course without any landmark, were also represented as using both arms (and legs?) impartially.

I have given the above evidence chiefly to show how weak it is. In the hope that some of your readers will try to collect data of the following nature from any of their acquaintance who have had experience in the matter:

(a) To which side, if any, do they circle?

(b) Are they right or left armed, right or left legged; or are the two sides equally strong?

It might also be interesting to learn from boating friends if they have observed any connection between the side on which they have been necustomed to row and the side to which they circle in sculling; such connection as that indicated above.

Finally, I may suggest that more might be known on the question of the heredity of right or left sidedness; and as to w'ether persons are often right-armed but left-legged, etc. But it must be remembered that tendencies of this nature are often "eliminated out" in childhood.—W. Larden, in Nature.

More Delicate.

"Didn't you say Jimson was a first-class salesman and a gentleman?" asked the boss, of a merchant traveler, relative to a new man who had proved quite the contrary.

"Yes, sir, I did not," was the emphatic reply.

"Well, I do not wish to impugn your veracity, but I am willing to make an affidavit to the effect that you told me you could say he was an excellent man in every respect."

"That's what I did say, sir."

"Why did you deny it, then?"

"I didn't deny it."

"I say you did."

"I beg your pardon; I said I could say that he was a faultless salesman and a gentleman, but I didn't say so, for reasons I notice I neglected to tell a lie, and so, a man in my profession never lies, that is, hardly ever."

"Oh—ah—indeed?" stammered the boss, "I should have been more particular, and, sir, you should have been more definite."—Merchant Traveler.

His Expectations.

A Chicago man, who was induced to purchase a large interest in a mole in the ground in Nevada, said to cousin silver, went to Virginia City to get some close idea of how matters stood. A professional mine inspector was called in, and, after some talk, he said:

"My charges will be $50 a day, whether I discover anything or not."

"Suppose you discover that half of this mine is worth $100,000?"

"Then you will probably present me with $50."

"And if you should discover that I have paid $18,000 for a half interest in a hole which won't pan out $200—what then?"

"Why, I should then expect the man who sold it to you to present me with at least a thousand!"

Anecdote from the Cow-Boy Country

Two ladies, one from the East and the other from the West, were sitting last summer on the veranda of one of our fashionable frontier hotels in Miles City chatting together, when two cattle men, clad in leather pants, buckskin shirts and sombreros, rode up.

"Oh, my," exclaimed the Eastern lady, "there are some of those horrid cow-boys; let us go inside."

"Why, you wretch," cried the little Western woman, "that's my husband," pointing to the foremost horseman.

"And the other?" inquired the Eastern lady.

"My brother," said the Western lady.—Chicago Tribune Letter.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY.

The County Ticket.

Pursuant to call the democratic convention to nominate county officers assembled at the Pine Lake house, Boyne, last Thursdy, Oct. 9th.

The convention was called to order by J. Milo Eaton, chairman of the county committee, who nominated E. M. Clark as temporary chairman. Chas. J. Strang, was elected secretary.

A committee of three on credentials were appointed, consisting of D. B. Jerome, C. J. Grier, and C. Schaub, who reported the following delegates present:

Bear Lake—E. C. Phelps[illegible], Smith Forsyth.
Boyne Valley—C. Dorr and M. Dickenson.
Hayes—S. A. Bacon.
Charlevoix—No delegates to be present, but the member of the county committee, A. P. Hensley, being present, was allowed to represent the township.
Charlevoix—L. D. Bartholomew, C. J. Grier, E. M. Clark, Chas. Kelly, Chas. J. Strang, O. B. Weed, Ben. Wenzer, Jas. Gillick.
Eastjordan—A. M. Calkoff, A. S. Martin, C. Schaub, Jas. B. Fellows, Chas. Hendee, A. J. Tillotson, Chas. Smith, Frank Coleman.
Eveline—Amasa J. Beers, Ava Smith, A. H. Noyes, R. Williams, Peter Arno, A. M. Talley.
Hayes—S. A. Bacon, F. J. Smith, E. H. Bennett, John Newshual.
Hudson—Not represented.
Marion—Wm. Miller and Wm. Vosburg with authority of caucus to cast full vote of the township.
Melrose—J. H. Lyman, Isiah S. P. Lord.
Norwood—M. D. Hilton, Edwin Cook, George Cole, Alfred Vandeusen.
Resort—Not represented.
South Arm—D. B. Jerome, P. Walsh, S. G. Isaman, authorized by convention to cast full vote of township.
Springvale—Not represented.
Wilson—Chas. Burch, authorized by convention to represent the township.

The temporary organization was made permanent, and the convention proceeded directly to business.

J. Milo Eaton made a verbal report of the action of the committee of conference appointed at the June convention, consisting on the part of the democrats of J. Milo Eaton, L. D. Bartholomew, and Chas. J. Strang, and on the part of the greenbackers of T. J. Hill, O. Blair and Oscar Tillotson; which committee agreed to give the greenbackers the nomination of clerk, register, treasurer, and one coroner, and the democrats the nomination of sheriff, judge of probate, prosecuting attorney, circuit court commissioner, surveyor, and one coroner.

The report was accepted and adopted.

The convention then proceeded to an informal ballot for sheriff, resulting as follows:

Whole number of votes cast	55
Peter Allen Sr.	1
D. U. Jerome	1
E. F. Ingalls	47

Mr Ingalls' nomination was made unanimous by acclamation.

For the office of prosecuting attorney, the name of Henry A. Jersey was the only one presented, and he was nominated by acclamation.

J. Milo Eaton was also nominated for judge of probate by acclamation.

For surveyor the names of Sidney Hayden and Wm. Miller were presented. On the first informal ballot, Hayden received 2 votes and Miller 52. Miller's nomination was made unanimous by acclamation.

For circuit court commissioner Arthur E. Martin was nominated by acclamation.

For one coroner, S. G. Isaman was nominated by acclamation.

A committee of three, to notify the greenback convention of the action of the democratic convention and to ask their endorsement of the same, was appointed, consisting of A. R. Noyes, E. C. Phetteplace, and Ava Smith.

A recess was then taken until reports could be received from the other convention.

After the greenbackers had concluded their work, the democratic convention reassembled, and received the report that the action of the committee had been adopted, and nominations had been made as follows:

Clerk—Wm. F. Palmiter.
Register—Elisha H. Shepard.
Treasurer—Orlando Blair.
Coroner—Chas. W. Dutcher.

Also that they had endorsed the nominations of the democratic convention.

On motion the nominees of the greenback convention were endorsed and a communication to that effect forwarded by the committees previously appointed.

The name of Chas. E. Burch was presented as a member of the county committee from Wilson township. Also the name of Oren Miller from Hudson township.

A vote of thanks was tendered A. J. Hall for the use of his house for the convention.

The convention then adjourned.

It would be difficult to conceive a more harmonious meeting than this. The almost of full votes of towns to the delegation, gave each township as complete representation as was possible without their actual presence. The election by ballot in every case of more than one candidate, gave every man an equal chance in the convention.

It is a strong ticket, and stands an excellent chance of election, from top to bottom.

THE GREENBACK CONVENTION.

The greenback convention assembled at Lewis hall, in Boyne City, at the same hour as the democratic. John Bell was elected chairman, and Jas. Sheer secretary.

T. J. Hill reported the action of the committee of conference, which was accepted and adopted unanimously.

The convention then balloted informally for candidate for register of deeds, with the following result:

Whole number of votes	36
E. H. Shepard	36
Richard Lake	36

The convention then proceeded to a formal ballot and elected E. H. Shepard, as follows:

Shepard	36
Lake	0

W. F. Palmiter was nominated for clerk, Orlando Blair for treasurer, and C. W. Dutcher for coroner, by acclamation.

The action of the democratic convention was endorsed unanimously.

The following county committee was appointed by the chair:

Hayes—Oscar Tillotson.
Norwood—Jas. Gillick.
South Arm—E. H. Hulbert.
Melrose—George Wardrope.
Wilson—John S. Newville.
Bear Lake—Geo. Forsyth.
Eveline—Walter Mannery.
Charlevoix—Orlando Blair.
Eastjordan—Chas. Smith.
Boyne Valley—Robert Finchy.
Evangeline—M. Houghtlin.

The following executive committee were elected:

Chairman—T. J. Hill.
Secretary—E. H. Shepard.
Treasurer—O. Blair.

The convention then adjourned.

Upon full and reliable information the democrats feel entirely certain of carrying New York for Cleveland. Indiana is also morally certain for the democrats, and this, with the south, elects Cleveland. New Jersey is certain and Wisconsin and Michigan are likely to add to the swelling strength of the democracy. There is also a fighting chance in Ohio, Illinois and Iowa. There is no longer any reasonable doubt of the election of Cleveland, while a complete republican break-down is not unlikely.—Ingham Democrat.

Mr. Blaine presented the question at Elyria—"Shall American labor be protected?" The miners of the Hocking Valley who struck against sixty-five cents a day, and are in consequence driven from the mines and from their homes by Mr. Blaine's syndicate, are possibly interested in it; not to mention the men, women, and children who are laboring in Jackson and Lewis counties of the same State for from fifteen to twenty-five cents a day.—New York Graphic.

Gen. John F. Farnsworth vouches for it as a fact that Gen. Logan did influence a number of young men of Illinois to join the Confederate army an intended to enter it himself, but finally saw there was better picking north for a soldier of fortune and remained.—Buffalo Courier.

No candid man can read the Mulligan letters without being convinced that Blaine sold his official influence for gain, and then lied about it in a most brazen way to escape detection.—Ingham Democrat.

EASTERN.

An examination of the accounts of ex-City Treasurer John W. Stout, of Newark, N. J., now deceased, shows $78,000 unaccounted for.

The house of John Sherry, at Edinburg, Pa., was invaded by masked men while five persons sat at the supper table. After binding and gagging the family, the robbers took $6,000 from an bible-case and $200 from the safe, driving off in a carriage.

A tax of $1,750 upon each box-holder of the Metropolitan Opera House at New York has been levied by the directors as a subsidy for thirteen weeks of German opera to begin Nov. 17.

J. W. Rosenthal & Co., clothing manufacturers at Rochester, N. Y., have made an assignment, giving preferences for $100,000.

Owing to losses by the Newton paper mill five the Hampden Mutual Assurance Company, of Springfield, Mass., has decided to close up business and has called in its policies.

Thirteen employed in Oliver Brothers & Phillips' collieries at Pittsburgh, Pa., refused to accept a reduction of 12½ per cent. in their wages. The proprietors have suspended work, thus throwing 1,200 men out of employment.

A fire at South Bethlehem, Penn., destroyed the Opera House, a row of brick stores, causing a loss of over $100,000. The Brossen Drike in the heads of some whisky barrels, and many of the side seam leaks helpless, one of them breaking his back by falling off an awning.

Ten thousand persons gathered in the Northampton (Mass.) campgrounds on the 4th inst. to celebrate the centennial of the independence of American Methodism.

The Fish Commissioner of Pennsylvania will catch at Fish's hatchery enough fish for turning into the lake but a million white-fish annually.

Burglars robbed four business places at Leroy, N. Y., the other night, securing about $1,000 in bonds and cash.

Upon opening a ventilator in a tiger's cage at Forepaugh's circus, at Waterbury, Conn., Richard Clark was seized by one of the animals, two others immediately attacking his legs. He was dragged inside the cage and horribly mutilated before being rescued, the tigers having been beaten off by iron bars.

A carriage at Graylock Crossing, Mass., containing George and Alice Hall, was struck by an express train. The corpse of the young man remained on the place while that of the lady was thrown on a high bank.

Work has been resumed at the Fort Pitt Iron and Steel Works, Pittsburg, after a suspension of three months. The Heading Cotton Mills will close for a month, owing to overproduction. The strike of stove moulders at Pittsburg, which has continued for nine months, has been declared off, and molders will return to work on individuals at a reduction of 15 per cent. The Golden Iron Works at Syracuse have gone into the hands of a receiver.

WESTERN.

The hottest night on record for that section was experienced on the 7d inst. at St. Paul, Minn., the thermometer registering 84 at midnight. The air was stifling, and the people feared than a disaster of some kind was imminent.

The racer Johnston electrified a small number of spectators at the Chicago Driving Park by making a record of 2:06¼. His final quarter was accomplished in 29 seconds, the second and third each in 31½, and the last in 31¼. There was a heavy outfoxed of applause over the wonderful feat. John Splan was the driver. Minnie R., the pacer, hitched in a buggy with the runner Firebrand, made a mile in 2:09¾.

For some time past cattle have been dying rapidly of an unknown malady in Belmont County, Ohio. Last week it was developed that only stock fed on sorghum plaster were affected, farmers being compelled to use this article for fodder, a drought having killed all the grass, and corn not being ready for use.

The body of George Furnival, a partner of Percival, who was murdered in Nance County, Nebraska, was discovered at the bottom of a well, making thus far five bodies discovered in the vicinity. The party guilty of this wholesale murder is supposed to be H. C. Baird, who is missing, and for whom arrest a reward of $1,000 is offered. He is supposed to have fled to New York, intending to go to England, his native home.

A passenger train on the Santa Fe Road escaped being wrecked by a tie placed on the track near Emporia, Kan., but a freight train which followed was broken up and the firemen was killed.

A Northern Pacific freight train was thrown from the track about mile from Duluth, by a washout on the road, and the locomotive, tender, and six cars of coal buried into the St. Louis River. Engineer Barter, Fireman Jenkins, and Brakeman Olson were thrown under the wreck and drowned.

A case of pleuro-pneumonia developed among some cattle of the native breed at St. Charles, Ill., and the sufferer was shot by the State Veterinarian, as was also a Jersey heifer. Eight horses are reported affected with glanders at Vincennes, Iowa. A disease resembling hog cholera prevails with fatality in the vicinity of Dubuque.

John McCullough, the tragedian, whose engagements for the season have been cancelled on account of his illness—an affliction that threatens insanity—became excited at St. Louis, and made a desperate effort to get on board a train to go to New York, knocking down the conductor. He was with difficulty removed to the Southern Hotel, and is in the hands of kind friends.

At Newaygo, Mich., John Armstrong found a boarder, George Innes, in his wife's room, and seizing an axe, rushed to him. The wife held Armstrong while her paramour went to years of a pistol, but he broke from her grasp, and killed her with the ax. Ripening down stairs, he met Innes ascending, and clew him with an axe blow. Armstrong then surrendered to the authorities.

A cigar peddler in San Francisco, named John Jacobs, has official advices that property in England of the value of $8,500 awaits his orders.

Two men and their wives were murdered by Mexicans at Rafferty's Ranch, in Southern Arizona, and a band is forming, and is also expected to have Indian victims to the deposition from Sonora.

A terrible disaster occurred south of Chicago in Lake Michigan, just opposite the Hyde Park Water Works, by which ten men lost their lives. Fifteen men were employed by the contractors in constructing an inlet tunnel to the water works. They lodged in a shanty constructed on piles at the crib about a mile from shore. A furious gale came up during the night, which washed the shanty off, and with it three of the men. One of the three drifted to shore on a plank and was saved. Of those who clung to the piles, eight were subdued by exposure to the waves and drowned. The four who managed to cling to their places were rescued by the tug-boat, which had to carry dangerous sail in order to save them.

Flames swept away St. Patrick's church at Eau Claire, Wis., causing a loss of $21,000.

Near Marysville, Mo., a bridge collapsed under a freight train laden with heavy mail of which were drowned. The engineer was killed, and the Fireman and Brakeman badly injured.

A freight train on the Union Pacific collided with a wild cow near Elkhorn, Neb., by which a fireman and engineer were killed and another fireman lost both legs.

SOUTHERN.

A quarter in a buckeshot at Austin, Texas, disappeared with $11,000, leaving the concern close to its doors.

An iron company at Chattanooga has contracted for 15,000 tons of metal for crossheads at $20.50 per ton.

Wash Fletcher (colored) was hanged for murder at Lancaster, Ky. The deceased his innocence to the last, and made a running speech of an hour's duration, and named four other men as the guilty parties. He prayed for gamblers and whisky dealers before he dropped.

The Louisiana State Board of Education decided to locate the State Normal School at Natchitoches, that town having given buildings and grounds valued at $50,000.

Gas has for three years been supplied to the people of Alabama at $4 per thousand feet, but the rival companies have combined in a pool and advanced the price to $4.25.

Capt. Wadhill, of the Confederate cruiser Shenandoah, has been given custody of a new steamer in the oyster navy of Maryland, patterned after the Federal revenue cutters.

The Illinois Central Road has ordered the survey of a line from Amos City to Memphis, in the territory tributary to the Mississippi and Tennessee Road, which recently passed into the hands of a rival company.

A barrel of whisky exploded at Canton, Miss., the liquid immediately taking fire, though there was neither light nor fire in the room.

WASHINGTON.

Mr. Nimmo's forthcoming statistical report on foreign commerce will show that the entire exports of manufactured products from Europe to all other countries do not equal the internal commerce of the United States in like products.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue announces a further postponement of the proposed change in the method of enforcing the collection of taxes overdue on distilled spirits in bond until Sept. 1, 1885. The last postponement is believed to be a practical abandonment of the proposed change.

Mr. John R. McLean, of the Cincinnati Enquirer, was married at Washington to Miss Emily T. Beale, daughter of Gen. Beale of that city.

POLITICAL.

We give below the vote of Ohio in Presidential years since the organization of the Republican party:

	Rep.	Dem.	Parality.
1856, October	187,497	170,544	16,953
1856, President	187,497	170,874	16,623

1880, President	375,048	340,821	34,227

Thousands of Republicans were contented.

One of the political parties that have nominated candidates for President and Vice President is in serious trouble. The American Alliance party failed to pay rent for its headquarters in a Philadelphia hotel, and last week the proprietor of the hostelry seized the chairs of the organization, consisting of a crimson campaign cap, a red cloak, and a junk bell worth about $1.15. It is claimed by the Secretary of the party that he has received no salary for eight years, but he has been promised the Secretaryship of War when the counsels of the Alliance is elected President, and he is hopeful.

The Democrats of the Fourth Wisconsin District have renominated Congressman Deuster. A Woman Suffrage Convention at Buffalo denounced the candidate of Mrs. Lockwood. A train carrying Mr. Hendricks to Wheeling collided with a hand car, killing a boy.

The straight Republicans of Missouri met at Macon, and nominated a full State ticket, headed by Oliver Gutter for Governor. J. Milton Turner is the candidate for Railroad Commissioner.

Congressional nominations include I. W. Van Schaick by the Republicans of the Fourth Wisconsin District, William W. Eaton by the Democrats of the First Connecticut, J. N. Carter by the Democrats of the Fourth Arkansas, Robert S. Stevens by the Democrats of the Thirty-first New York, and Charles S. Baker by the Republicans of the Thirtieth New York.

John Quincy Adams has declined a Democratic nomination for Congress in Massachusetts.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The creditors of Shaw Brothers & Co., the Boston bankers, have agreed to accept thirty cents on the dollar. Their liabilities are about $7,000,000.

Gustave Fox, liabilities $30,000, and Emil Baumbauer, liabilities $40,000, prominent jewelers of Cincinnati, have made assignments.

Senator Morgan, of Alabama, who has just returned from a trip to California, expresses the opinion that steel ships-and rails ought to be built in the United States ten per centum less than on the Atlantic seaboard on account of the rich iron deposits.

A seven-story timber brace warehouse in San Francisco from Alaska that the whole state is of good average, and that no coal has been discovered and the Kowak River fully explored.

Two Manitoba and Northwestern men killed by here runs in the St James Hotel at St. Louis, and sending word by a friend to help, slipped into the apartment, locked the door, and threw the key through the transom. Then she took from the trunk the money and valuables he had appropriated, and when people from the office opened the door, handed him into their charge.

The remains of the celebrated Iroquois Chief, Red Jacket, and those of other distinguished warriors were removed the other day at Buffalo, on the lot donated by the Forest Lawn Association. A large number of Indians were present at the ceremony. While the remains were being carried in cedar caskets from the recess of the Historical Society, bands, wearing antique costumes, chanted solemn funeral dirges.

Charleston (W. Va.) dispatch: A Republican was captured when the train bearing Gen. Logan and party reached Hinton. The General was speaking from the platform of his car, when he was interrupted by a man named West, who pushed forward through the throng to within a few feet of the speaker. "You raised the first rebel flag in Illinois, and I want to shake hands with you," the fellow shouted, stretching out his right hand. "Who are you?" he followed Logan, forbodingly. "I don't know who," returned West, nonplussed. "I know I'm one." "You are a liar!" hissed Logan, and reaching his cane over the railing he struck the intruder a blow that knocked him off, and Logan afterward remarked to a friend that he regretted not having a number of tobacco juice to make use of in punishing West's audacity.

The various Bible societies of the world last year printed and purchased, for distribution, 2,115,765 copies of the Scriptures. This does not indicate much diminution in the zeal of the church.—The Current.

THE WHITE HOUSE RACE.

Progress of the Republican Candidate's Campaign in Ohio and West Virginia.

The Democratic Vice Presidential Candidate at Wheeling—Joseph Mulhatton's Acceptance.

Mr. Blaine and party left Cleveland, by special train on the Lake Shore Railroad, on the morning of Oct. 3. The crowd at the depot and the workingmen in the shops being the track cheered Mr. Blaine as the train passed out. The first stop was at a little station, Mr. Blaine was warmly received, and he spoke a few words to the people, who cheered heartily. At Norwalk, where the Republican candidate was expected to speak, the Democratic candidate was on the ground, and had arranged for a rival speech, combining his remarks on the tariff question. At Sandusky Blaine's reception was enthusiastic. At Toledo he spoke from the platform to a very large and enthusiastic crowd. At Fremont he had arranged for a joint discussion with Mr. Thurman, but the latter failed to appear, and Mr. Blaine spoke at considerable length on the tariff question. At Bellefontaine he was greeted by a large crowd, and the candidate was cheered to the echo when he said he was a native of the county. There was a torch-light parade of unthoughtful clubs with a band of music, and Blaine spoke to a crowd of 3,000 people.

The party reached at Columbus during the night, and on the morning of Oct. 4 they left Mount and Olds Road for West Virginia. The train stopped for breakfast at Athens, and Mr. Blaine followed his wife and daughter to the table, where he was given a warm welcome. At Parkersburg the train was greeted by a large crowd, composed largely of working men, who had been laid off from work on the Newark to a Democratic town, and the demonstration was made in the hope that the President would be induced to stop and make a speech. Mr. Blaine did not, however, but he was cheered to the echo when he said he was "a native of Pennsylvania, but proud of being a citizen of Ohio." The party left Parkersburg at 10 o'clock, and reached Wheeling at 1 o'clock. Mr. Blaine was introduced by the editor of the party, Colonel Stevenson, and made a brief address.

GOV. HENDRICKS.

The Democratic Vice Presidential Candidate at Wheeling.

(Wheeling (W. Va.) telegram.)

Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks spoke in the opera house here last evening to a crowd of the two thousand. Delegations from the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis Road, and after taking breakfast at his hotel an informal reception was tendered him and Mrs. Hendricks at the Ohio Valley House, at which place Mr. Many announced the presence of Mr. Hendricks, and Mr. Many then gave a speech of a half hour, in which he made a parade of the exploding claim to be a Democratic party during the campaign. It passed off very well, and the audience was very quiet during the speech, which was full of march. About five thousand strangers came in the city during the day, and Fellows, of New York, spoke at Capitol Square to a crowd of about 1,000 people. The Democrats have labored very hard to get a crowd here to-day, and have succeeded in bringing a large number of people from the west parts of the State, and from the south parts of the State, and afterward made some brief remarks, Gov. Hendricks being the distinguished visitor as it passed.

THE DISTURBERS.

Points from Joe Mulhatton's Letter of Acceptance.

The committee appointed by the Democratic Convention waited upon the Hon. Joseph Mulhatton, at Louisville, Ky., and notified him officially of his nomination for President of the United States. Mr. Mulhatton's letter of acceptance was read by the chairman of the committee. The principal points of interest in it are as follows: The cost of a drummer in the Republican army is estimated at $1,000 a year, which would prevent any honest soldiers from ever being able to bring the business interests of the country. It is shown that the cost of the Republican party in business man can drink intoxicating liquor, and that a Democratic business man can not. The Republicans are accused of using the Bible and churches with honest worshippers in the land and Israel and with a relic of barbarism. It favors retrenchment, reform, and economy, and says that the money to be applied at once to liquidating the public debt and for public improvements.

Candidates for President.

The whole number of candidates for the Presidency that have been formally named for the race to this date is seven, as follows:

Grover Cleveland, of New York.
James G. Blaine, of Maine.
John A. Logan, of Illinois.
Benjamin F. Butler, of Massachusetts.
John P. St. John, of Kansas.
Benjamin F. Butler, of Massachusetts.
W. L. Ellsworth, of Dakota.
Joseph Mulhatton, of Kentucky.

IT MUST GO.

The Long Dominance of the Republican Party and Its Ideas

Has Corrupted the Public Morals and Inaugurated the Era of Bribery and Fraud.

Eloquent Speech of Gen. J. C. Black, Delivered at Freeport, Ill., Sept. 6.

Railways stole the inheritance of men to enrich them to pass through the enrichment of the country on this. You have heard from the same school, I believe, will to your discomfort, that the Democratic party is a party of rebellion, that its chiefs are disloyal, as I am, in a pure administration of the laws and in an economical Government. Permit me, I appeal to the intelligent and patriotic men of this district. It is never in the annals of what I call a party, I am sectional ringing charge, that a party, which has been in power for a majority of the individual members of each party, though I am positive that the party which I belong to, which has been in power a short time, has contributed to the welfare of the country, and I am proud of the fact, that the Democratic party, with its twenty-light parade of unthoughtful clubs with a band of music, and Blaine spoke to a crowd of 3,000 people.

The party reached at Columbus during the night, and on the morning of Oct. 4 they left Mount and Olds Road for West Virginia. The train stopped for breakfast at Athens, and Mr. Blaine followed his wife and daughter to the table, where he was given a warm welcome. At Parkersburg the train was greeted by a large crowd, composed largely of working men, who had been laid off from work on the Newark to a Democratic town, and the demonstration was made in the hope that the President would be induced to stop and make a speech. Mr. Blaine did not, however, but he was cheered to the echo when he said he was "a native of Pennsylvania, but proud of being a citizen of Ohio." The party left Parkersburg at 10 o'clock, and reached Wheeling at 1 o'clock. Mr. Blaine was introduced by the editor of the party, Colonel Stevenson, and made a brief address.

WRITES AS HE THINKS.

Gen. Roscrans Has a Word to Say About the Plumed Fraud.

Alleging that He Denied His First Religion for Political Greed.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 51.

REV. PETER PATTERSON, I never have found reason to trust a man who openly denies the religion in which he was educated. Among the actions upon which our religion lays indelible stigma are lying, stealing, and false witnessing and lying. The life of Blaine was brought up in a Christian home, well known, and equally well known is that he has formally denied the Catholic faith and gotten a certificate of his conversion in a Congregational church from the pastor. Waite at Augusta, Maine, is a Congregational church. Blaine's first declaration of this sort was made at Hartford, and Mr. Burnham, prosecutor in a case of Blaine's, has given a sworn statement which shows that he knew of Blaine's change of faith in Hartford, and that he knew of the change in Augusta, Maine, and that he knew of the change in Washington, and that he knew of the change in Chicago, and that he knew of the change in Philadelphia, and that he knew of the change in Pittsburgh, and that he knew of the change in Cincinnati, and that he knew of the change in Cleveland, and that he knew of the change in Toledo, and that he knew of the change in Fremont, and that he knew of the change in Sandusky, and that he knew of the change in Bellefontaine, and that he knew of the change in Columbus, and that he knew of the change in Parkersburg, and that he knew of the change in Wheeling

Democratic Representative Convention.

A democratic representative convention will be held at Petoskey, on Tuesday, Oct. 14, 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating a representative in the state legislature for the district comprising the counties of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it. Each county is entitled to six delegates.

By ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

The above convention is adjourned to Tuesday Oct. 21st, at the same hour and place. Delegates will be governed accordingly.

By ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

Greenback Representative Convention.

A greenback representative convention will be held at the Pentland hotel, Petoskey, on Tuesday, Oct. 21st, at 2 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of nominating a representative in the state legislature for the district comprising the counties of Charlevoix, Emmet, and Cheboygan, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the convention.

By ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

Ohio only 8,000 Republican.

A special by telephone received this morning states that returns from the entire state of Ohio give a republican majority of 8,000.

October Elections.

Wednesday morning papers give returns from the Ohio election showing republican gains as compared with last year, but losses compared with the presidential election four years ago. Republicans claim 20,000 and democrats concede 10,000, but later returns are likely to reduce these figures. In 1880 the republican majority in October was over 19,000, and in November over 32,000. When we consider that during the past two weeks both Ingersoll and Logan, besides nine cabinet officers or government clerks from Washington, have been busy remarking the state with their presence, and have spent a million and a half of money, it is a surprise that the majority is not larger.

West Virginia gives a democratic majority of 4,000 to overcome a legion of greenbackers and republicans. In 1880 this state gave a democratic majority of 2,900.

The Candidates.

Our readers are doubtless interested in the nominations made last Thursday, and would like to know something of the antecedents of the men proposed to administer the government of this county for the ensuing two years.

JUDGE OF PROBATE.

J. Milo Eaton is too well known in this county to need my eulogy here. A native of New England, he came to Michigan, and graduated from the law department of Michigan university in 1875. In that year he located in Charlevoix, in the practice of law, and since that time has had a hand in pretty much everything pertaining to the growth and prosperity of the village and surroundings. In addition to his law, real estate, insurance, and other business, he has served the people one term as prosecuting attorney, four years as judge of probate, one term as president of the village, has been, and is now, a member of the school board, and of the village council. In 1880 he was candidate for state senator against Archie Dutton, running ahead of his ticket in every town where he was well known. Having had experience as judge of probate, and knowing the necessity for accurate, well-kept records, he will make an officer in whom the people can have confidence. Residing at the county seat, and having an office always open, the business of the court can be transacted any day in the year, instead of once or twice a month, as is the case when the judge resides in some other part of the county.

SHERIFF.

Benjamin F. Ingalls represents the younger element of democracy who are partisan because of their faith in the broad, unchanging principles of liberty as enunciated by the orig inal defenders of the faith. Only 26 years of age, he has all the physical requisites of the office to which he is called and will make a sheriff in fact as well as in name. He has been a resident of Emmet and Charlevoix counties 19 years, having been engaged at Petoskey in the mercantile trade five years, and in real estate three years. He has a wide acquaintance, and his popularity is attested by his election three times to the office of sheriff in Emmet county, the first election occurring within one month after attaining the age of 21 years. His home is now at Boyne, where he has many friends during the past year.

COUNTY TREASURER.

Orlando Blair like many of Charlevoix county citizens, came from New York state. He was born in Washington county, in 1847. He passed the first 23 years of his life on a farm. Following Horace Greeley's advice he came west in 1870, and settled in Grand Rapids. First came to Grand Traverse region in 1874, and liking the climate and having faith in the future of our county, he settled permanently in Charlevoix where he has remained ever since. His business career has well fitted him for the office to which he is named, having been employed by Cressell, Greer & Co., and their successors, as paymaster while engaged in building the New York and Canada railroad, in which capacity large sums of money passed through his hands. His success in their employment was due to the practical knowledge of book keeping and the fact that he is a thorough accountant. Later he represented Mr. Mills, in the firm of Haywood & Mills, lumbermen, of Cassanovia, Mich. In politics he is a greenbacker, and is now a most ardent Bathorite. He is known as the original greenbacker of Charlevoix, having been at one time the only elector in Charlevoix township to vote the greenback ticket. Mr. Blair has twice held the office of supervisor in his town, both times being elected by a large majority by his friends over strong republican opposition notwithstanding his strong greenback doctrine. If three-fourths of our business men do not change their outspoken opinion, history will repeat itself by giving him a good round majority this fall for county treasurer.

REGISTER OF DEEDS.

Elisha H. Shepard is 35 years old and is a representative of that class of workingmen who begin with nothing and build for themselves a home, a business, and a standing among his people. The death of his father when he was 16 years old, left upon him the support of five younger brothers and one sister. He served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's bench, saved something, bought a farm with a mortgage, lost everything in 1881, and came to Charlevoix county to begin new. Taught school, worked at any honest labor necessary to keep things moving, and at his trade when possible. He is a total abstainer from the use of tobacco and liquor in all forms, and always an active temperance man. Was a republican until 1877. Helped to organize the greenback party in Ingham county, and cast one of only three votes in Stockbridge township that year. In 1880 was nominated by acclamation for county clerk of Ingham county, by the greenback party. Has been secretary of the greenback county committee during his residence in this county, and always active in organizing and working at the polls for the success of the party. Was last Thursday unanimously re-elected secretary for the ensuing two years. He is entitled to and should receive the vote of every working man in the county. If elected he will give personal attention to the duties of the office.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

Henry A. Jersey was born at Romeo, Macomb county, Michigan, December 15, 1850. In the spring of 1853, removed to a farm in Ionia county. Here he engaged in farm labor, working summers and going to school winters. His parents were poor and much of the hard work of the farm necessary to maintain a large family, of which he was the second child and eldest son, fell upon his shoulders. When in his eighteenth year his health failed and his strength being inadequate to the severe toil of the farm, he was permitted to return to Romeo where he worked for his board in the winter and went to school at the Dickinson's institute. In the spring he returned home and placed himself under the tutorage of Charles W. Borst, of Greenville, Mich., one of the finest teachers of the English branches and mathematics in Michigan. He worked vacations in the harvest field and wherever he could find employment and taught school winters to enable him to continue his course of study. He graduated from the academic course in the Greenville union school in 1873. In the fall of the same year with the "class of 77" he entered the literary department of Michigan University in the latin and scientific course, where his conduct won for him the commendations of his professors. But means failed and he was not able to complete his course, and did not return with his class the second year. He taught schools and obtained means whereby he was enabled to enter upon the study of the law. He entered the office of ex-congressman, C. C. Ellsworth and John Lowe, of Greenville, Mich., and after studious application and a thorough reading of the standard treatises on common law, he was admitted to the bar of Montcalm county, January 15, 1877, passing a fine examination. Since which time he has engaged in the practice of his profession in Ionia county, and in Charlevoix county, to which latter place he removed two years ago. He has gained success in his profession by his study and gift as a speaker. He is a man of good habits and is proud to boast that he has never known the taste of beer or intoxicating liquors, and never chewed tobacco or smoked a cigar. He is a man of comprehensive information and can discuss readily and intelligently all the great questions that agitate the thought of the world.

COUNTY CLERK.

William F. Palmiter, one of the publishers of the East Jordan Enterprise, came from Oceana county in 1881. He is a graduate of Lansing, Oct., commercial college, and is now 28 years old. He has been a greenbacker 12 years, and as such held various township offices in Oceana county. He has been a justice of the peace one term, and is the present supervisor from South Arm township.

CIRCUIT COURT COMMISSIONER.

Arthur E. Martin is a native of Oak land county, Mich., and is 38 years old. He grew up on a farm in Eaton county; read law two years; taught school in Charlotte; re-engaged in farming; again read law, and was admitted to the bar of Eaton county, April 22, 1883. Removed to Boyne in November, 1883, and is a member of the law firm of Norton, Kent & Martin. He is a democrat from a careful study of its principles. A fellow-student, who know him at his home and in his studies, says he is scrupulously honest, his character and reputation are unassailable, and he has a broad sense of justice in dealing with his fellow man,—eminent qualifications for the office for which he is named.

SURVEYOR.

William Miller is a man with much experience. He came to this county in 1866, from New York. At the organization of the county he was elected surveyor, and held the office until 1876, when he went to Arkansas and remained seven years. Returning to his old home in Marion in April, 1883, he was appointed deputy county surveyor, which office he now holds. He also had experience in the business in New York, and in Arkansas. He has been a democrat all his life, except about eight years during the infancy and early purity of the republican party.

CORONERS.

Solomon G. Isaman, of South Arm, is a man of large experience, 43 years old. He settled in South Arm in 1866, is a veteran of the war, and was a republican to 1867. Has dabbled in politics a little, serving the people two terms as township treasurer, and once as coroner.

Charles W. Dutcher, of Boyne Falls, is a native of New York, 44 years old. Served during the war in the 103d O. V. I. Lived 23 years in Cleveland, and followed ship-building. Since coming to Michigan has been a farmer and lumberman. Held the office of justice of the peace two terms; and trustee of his township in Ohio one term.

Democratic Representative Convention.

A democratic representative convention will be held at Petoskey, on Tuesday, Oct 21, 1884, at 2 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of nominating a representative in the state legislature for the district comprising the counties of Charlevoix, Emmet and Cheboygan, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it. Each county is entitled to such delegates.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

The above convention is adjourned to Tuesday Oct. 21st, at the same hour and place. Delegates will be governed accordingly.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

Greenback Representative Convention.

A greenback representative convention will be held at the Gresham hotel, Petoskey, on Tuesday, Oct. 21st, at 2 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of nominating a representative in the state legislature for the district comprising the counties of Charlevoix, Emmet, Cheboygan, and for the transaction of such other business as may come before the convention.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

Ohio only 8,000 Republican.

A special by telephone received this morning states that returns from the entire state of Ohio give a republican majority of 8,000.

October Elections.

Wednesday morning papers give returns from the Ohio election showing republican gains as compared with last year, but fewer, compared with the presidential election four years ago. Republicans claim 20,000 and democrats concede 10,000, but later returns are likely to reduce these figures. In 1880 the republican majority in October was over 19,000, and in November over 31,000. When we consider that during the past two weeks both Blaine and Logan, both the whole available force of government clerks from Washington, have been fairly livestocking the state with their demagogy, and have spent a million and a half of money, it is a surprise that the majority is not larger.

West Virginia gives a democratic majority of 4,000 to 10,000 over a fusion of greenbackers and republicans. In 1880 this state gave a democratic majority of 4,096.

The Candidates.

Our readers are doubtless interested in the nominations made last Thursday, and would like to know something of the antecedents of the men proposed to administer the government of this county for the ensuing two years.

JUDGE OF PROBATE.

J. Milo Eaton is too well known in this county to need any eulogy here. A native of New England, he came to Michigan, and graduated from the law department of Michigan university in 1876. In that year he located in Charlevoix, in the practice of law, and since that time has had a hand in pretty much everything pertaining to the growth and prosperity of the village and surroundings. In addition to his law, real estate, insurance, and other business, he has served the people one term as prosecuting attorney, four years as judge of probate, one term as president of the village, has been, and is now, a member of the school board, and of the village council. In 1880 he was candidate for state senator against Archie Sutherland, running ahead of his ticket in every town where he was well known. Having had experience as judge of probate, and knowing the necessity for accurate, well-kept records, he will make an officer in whom the people can have confidence. Residing at the county seat, and having an office always open, the business of the court can be transacted any day in the year, instead of once or twice a month, as is the case when the judge resides in some other part of the county.

SHERIFF.

Benjamin F. Ingalls represents the younger element of democracy who are partisan because of their faith in the broad, unchanging principles of liberty as enunciated by the original defenders of the faith. Only 36 years of age, he has all the physical requisites of the office to which he is called and will make a sheriff in fact as well as in name. He has been a resident of Emmet and Charlevoix counties 19 years, having been engaged at Petoskey in the mercantile trade five years, and in real estate three years. He has a wide acquaintance, and his popularity is attested by his election three times to the office of sheriff in Emmet county, the first election occurring within one month after attaining the age of 21 years. His home is now at Boyne, where he has made many friends during the past year.

COUNTY TREASURER.

Orlando Blair like many of Charlevoix county citizens, came from New York state. He was born in Washington county, in 1847. He passed the first 23 years of his life on a farm. Following Horace Greeley's advice he came west in 1870, and settled in Grand Rapids. First came to Grand Traverse region in 1874, and liking the climate and having faith in the future of our county, he settled permanently in Charlevoix where he has remained ever since. His business career has well fitted him for the office to which he is named, having been employed by Cresswell, Gwen & Co., and their successors, as paymaster while engaged in building the New York and Canada railroad, in which capacity large sums of money passed through his hands. His success in their employment was due to the practical knowledge of book keeping and the fact that he is a thorough accountant. Later he represented Mr. Mills, in the firm of Haywood & Mills, lumbermen, of Casanovia, Mich. In politics he is a greenbacker, and is now a most ardent Butlerite. He is known as the original greenbacker of Charlevoix, having been at one time the only elector in Charlevoix township to vote the greenback ticket. Mr. Blair has twice held the office of supervisor in his town, both times being elected by a large majority by his friends over strong republican opponents notwithstanding his strong greenback doctrine. If three-fourths of our business men do not change their outspoken opinion, history will again repeat itself by giving him a good round majority this fall for county treasurer.

REGISTER OF DEEDS.

Elisha H. Shepard is 35 years old and is a representative of that class of workingmen who begin with nothing and build for themselves a home, a business, and a standing among his people. The death of his father when he was 16 years old, left upon him the support of five younger brothers and one sister. He served an apprenticeship at the carpenter's bench, saved something, bought a farm with a mortgage, lost everything in 1881, and came to Charlevoix county to begin new. Taught school, worked at any honest labor necessary to keep things moving, and at his trade when possible. He is a total abstainer from the use of tobacco and liquor in all forms, and always an active temperance man. Was a republican until 1877. Helped to organize the greenback party in Ingham county, and cast one of only three votes in Stockbridge township that year. In 1880 was nominated by acclamation for county clerk of Ingham county, by the greenback party. Has been secretary of the greenback county committee during his residence in this county, and always active in organizing and working at the polls for the success of the party. Was last Thursday unanimously re-elected secretary for the ensuing two years. He is a [illegible] and should receive the vote of every workingman in the county. He will give personal attention to the duties of the office.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

Henry A. Jersey was born in Macomb county, Mich., December 15, 1850. In the 1865, removed to a farm in Genesee county. Here he engaged in labor, working summers and school winters. His parents were poor and much of the hard toil fell upon him, the eldest son, the burden of providing for the family falling on his shoulders. When in his eighteenth year his health failed and his being inadequate to the severe toil of the farm, he was permitted to return to Romeo where he worked at the carpenter's trade during the summer and went to the Dickinson's institute, spring he returned home and finished his preparation for the ministry under the tutorage of W. Borst, of Greenville, Mich the finest teachers of the branches and mathematics in the state. He worked vacations during the harvest field and when he was able to teach in the winter and went to school the remainder of the year. But mean while his health had failed and his ambition was not able to comply with his desires, and did not return to the second class. He taught and obtained means with which he entered upon the study of the law. He entered the office of Congressman, C. C. Ellsworth and John Lewis, of Greenville, Mich. After studious application and rough reading of the standard law common law, he was admitted to the bar of Montcalm county, June 15, 1877, passing a fine examination. Since which time he has kept the practice of his profession in this county, and in Charlevoix county, to which latter place he removed two years ago. He has gained success in his profession by his study and grit as a speaker. He is a man of good habits and is proud to boast that he has never known the taste of beer or intoxicating liquors, and never chewed tobacco or smoked a cigar. He is a man of comprehensive information and can discuss readily and intelligently all the great questions that agitate the thought of the world.

COUNTY CLERK.

William F. Palmiter, one of the publishers of the East Jordan Enterprise, came from Oceana county in 1881. He is a graduate of London, Ont., commercial college, and is now 38 years old. He has been a greenbacker 12 years, and as such held various township offices in Oceana county. He has been a justice of the peace one term, and is the present supervisor from South Arm township.

CIRCUIT COURT COMMISSIONER.

Arthur E. Martin is a native of Oakland county, Mich., and is 38 years old. He grew up on a farm in Eaton county; read law two years; taught school in Charlotte; engaged in farming; again read law, and was admitted to the bar of Eaton county, the law firm of Norton, Kent & Martin. He is a democrat from a careful study of its principles. A fellow-student, who knew him at his home and in his studies, says he is scrupulously honest, his character and reputation are unassailable, and he has a broad sense of justice in dealing with his fellow man,—eminent qualifications for the office for which he is named.

SURVEYOR.

William Miller is a man with much experience. He came to this county in 1869, from New York. At the organization of the county he was elected surveyor, and held the office until 1876, when he went to Arkansas and remained seven years. Returning to his old home in Marion in April, 1883, he was appointed deputy county surveyor, which office he now holds. He also had experience in the business in New York, and in Arkansas. He has been a democrat all his life, except about eight years during the infancy

SKETCH OF THE Life and Public Services OF Josiah W. Begole

Governor of Michigan.

Life of Governor Begole.

Hon. Josiah W. Begole, the subject of this sketch, was born in Livingston Co., N. Y., Jan. 29th, 1818, his father an early pioneer in the state of Maryland. His ancestors were of the imperial grandfather Captain Begole was a soldier under Napoleon Bonaparte, and was in the battle of Waterloo. The family came to New York about the beginning of the present century. Both his grandparents died, were buried in Livingston county, New York. Young Begole was left an orphan at an early age, and was bound out to a farmer in Livingston county, with whom he remained until he was twenty-one years of age, receiving for his services a good education in the common schools, and the usual wages of a farm hand. Soon after his majority he went to Ontario county, where he worked at his trade, that of a carpenter, for some time, when he went to Rochester, where he worked at his trade for some time, when he went to Ontario county, where he worked at his trade

BY THE DEEP, SAD SEA.

BY ALICE E. GRIER.

Down by the deep, sad sea,
The foam-capped waves lick the shore,
Dreaming a spell, that brings to me
Of my—what—lost of yore.

The sun, wind kisses my tear-wet cheek,
With one who knew my young girlish heart and soul,
When I journed to the rather-bad, down to my
Down by the deep, sad sea.

How it hurts the deep, deep pain
He hath gone to a better home by-and-by!
He is—was, hardly—a shrine of song,
He follows—follows—down by the deep, sad sea.

The cool wave around him rises—
The seaweed plays it gaily in hand;
The hole gives a cheerful interest to me—
Down by the deep, sad sea.

Down by the deep, sad sea
A heart is broken, all too human crushed,
The sad sea seems to a sweet song—
Down by the deep, sad sea.

Hopeless, long hope! In the silent grave,
Where the sad sea flows—or seems to flow—
The sunbeams will awake to flow—
In heaven, bring Heaven with him sun.

MARGARET.

BY LILY M. CORE.

He might have been very comfortable, sitting there by the window, if the sunlight had slipped away, leaving only a mild reflection, and if a sea breeze came sending into such a pleasant, salty odor. He might have been very comfortable had he not been thinking, twinging giving consciousness. The afternoon light fired the great diamond of his finger ring, and so directed his thoughts for a moment; then they returned to the subject of his uneasiness.

If only he had not come to this place! And yet how pleasant it had been, here on the peaceful New England coast, in the old sea-captain's house. How thoroughly he had enjoyed the boat, the sailing, the fishing with line and reel! How many splendid triumphs he had landed! Margaret, too—ah! Margaret! His conscience was at his singe.

He stood up restlessly and looked at himself in the glass. He was growing stronger every day; the long illness, from which he had come here to recuperate, was a shadow of the past. His friends, which was to say his mother and Elmer, would be delighted at the transformation. It was Elmer's last letter that had brought him to his senses, remained him of his obligations, made it to get away from this place at once and join his mother and his betrothed at a fashionable summer resort.

He took his straw hat and went down into the piazza. Margaret was sitting there, alone and pretty in her white afternoon dress. It seemed to him she flushed at his approach; and he felt still guilty. He sat down on the steps at her feet, and sighed faintly.

She dropped the section of her rocking-cover and asked.

"What's the matter?"

"Nothing; only I feel sad at going away."

"Going away?" she repeated slowly. "Are you going away sooner than—than you thought?"

"I'm afraid I shall have to. I've received a letter—I've heard from my mother, and really think I must go—soon, maybe tomorrow."

Margaret began to rock again, not speaking for some moments. Then she said quietly:

"We shall miss you very much—mother and I."

"You have both been very good to me."

"Perhaps we shall hear from you sometimes," she suggested. "You won't forget us, quite."

"There was always a pleasantness in her voice, a voice that one might more easily be enamored of than of its possessor. For she was not a beauty, this Margaret. She was too brown, too agile, too sparrow-like.

"Indeed, I shall never forget you," he answered, soberly. "I have written much about you to my mother and Miss Hastings."

"Miss Hastings?"

"Yes." For the moment he fairly hated himself; but he was determined to brave it out. "Miss Elmer Hastings. We are to be married in the autumn."

Then neither spoke. Glancing up into her face presently, he found it passive, a trifle pale, perhaps, besides. Maybe it was only his fancy; maybe she did not care for him. He hoped so. Then he felt miserable.

"I am going to row out to the 'Ledge,' he said.

But Margaret did not offer to accompany him. And so he turned away and left her there.

"It is done," he said to himself. "Well, I hope she doesn't mind. Poor little girl! How fond one might be of her! One thing, I'll never board again with a widower and a young lady daughter. I only hope she won't think me too contemptible. I haven't meant to flirt—she's a very soft sparrow—a pressure of the hand at times—wrong, of course."

The tide was out and the skiff clung to the sand. He pushed off slowly, into deeper water.

He had been out to the "Ledge" a number of times on this, but always Margaret went with him to remind him when any must leave the rocks. To-day he must row alone for himself; there was no plaintive voice to warn him.

"The rocks are covered at high water."

Margaret sat looking after him as he went down the road.

"The end of it all," she said to herself in a hopeless way. "The end of it all!"

And when he was out of sight, she went into the house and up to her own chamber, where she threw herself down by the bed and buried her face in hands. She did not sob or shed a tear; she only knelt there and suffered.

"I might have known!" she moaned. "I might have known! What am I that he should care for me? Oh, Richard, Richard!"

Meanwhile Richard Lester found it rather pleasant out upon the "Ledge." Now, that the "murder was out," he could breathe more easily. He fastened the rope of his boat around a rock, and went up higher. He sat down where the sun had kissed away the dampness, and contemplated. He presumed he should be happy as Elmer's husband. Elmer was considered handsome; she was wealthy, refined, accomplished; she dressed in excellent taste and moved in the best society. His mother worshiped her. She, Elmer, was twenty-three years old; six years his junior. Poor little Margaret could not be over eighteen, he supposed. Poor little brown bird!

Then his thoughts took a wider range. He forgot where he was; he grew utterly oblivious to the fading sunlight or the water rising slowly about the rocks.

The lapping, limpid, lingering water, musical and insinuating.

There was no Margaret present to remind him.

"The rocks are covered at high water."

Margaret had been kneeling by her bed for a long, long time—hours, perhaps—when she heard her mother calling.

"Coming directly," she answered, and rose from her knees. Her room, though, There were no tear-marks on her face; only a pen, pallor.

"Where is my dear Lester, Margaret?"

"I don't know, mother. Is it near supper-time?"

"Yes; it is getting late. I thought surely you would know where he was."

The words hurt Margaret, unmeaning as they had been spoken; but she only replied quietly.

"He went away a long while ago. He was going out to the 'Ledge.'"

"Then he has returned before this; the tide is coming in."

Margaret felt a sudden, inexplicable fear. She could not tell why she should feel thus. She turned and went out of the house, and off in the direction of the beach. Perhaps it was habit; she had grown accustomed to think of him as in need of looking after.

Richard Lester had finally come to his senses. He remembered now that the tide was coming in, and that he must return. Rowing would be easy and delightful. He arose, rubbed his eyes, and made his way down to the boat. But, to his unspeakable astonishment and discomfiture, the boat was gone.

"Gone!" he said to himself, in a faint, confused tone. "What shall I do?"

He looked off shoreward, and fancied he saw his empty skiff, tossing about lightly on the waters that had wooed it. He kept on looking until his eyes were blind. And still the water rising about him.

"My mother would have missed me the most," he returned. "Elmer would have cried, I suppose; but she is still young, and young people recover from such things."

"Do they?" asked Margaret, sharply. "Let me think. I could, if—if any one cared for were lost."

She puzzled him now. Perhaps he had seen the poor little creature, who had a lover whom she loved.

"That is some one, then, that you care for, dear child," he said softly. She started.

"Yes," she said, as if she defied him.

Her answer gave him a vast relief.

"I was glad," he said, earnestly. "I would like to plan the happiest future for you. I suppose I shall be happy myself. My mother is well suited, and Miss Hastings is very amiable."

They were getting close to the building, and Margaret seemed wholly occupied with the time.

He rested his oars and spoke with a sudden impulse:

"Tell me, are you very happy in this love of yours?"

"Very happy!" she cried, laughing wildly.

"I would not change places with any one else."

"I am so glad," he said once more.

"I was afraid—you would be angry, Margaret. I want to tell you the truth. I think so much of you, dear child, I was afraid you might think I was trying to—to trifle with you myself. God knows I had no thought of it. You must forgive me, Margaret."

"No," she said, softly. "I am not angry. I never thought of you as a trifler."

"And we shall always be friends?"

"Always!" The old pathetic ring was in her voice.

Then handed them and walked slowly homeward.

At the gate he paused, and with a sudden motion, drew from his finger the diamond that had sparkled there. "What this for my sake?" he cried, "dear Margaret."

She snatched her hand away with a sharp cry.

"No, O no! Not that!"

But he, insisting, slipped it on. Then she broke away from him and ran up her own room.

He does not mean!" she sobbed, flinging herself down as once before that day. "Thank heaven, he does not dream! And I love him. O, I love him! But he will be happy; that is the most I care. O yes, he will be happy."

The Festival of "Juggernaut"

The great Car Festival of Juggernaut held at Pooree, commencing on the 16 to the southwest of Calcutta, is numerically the most important and decorative of the monster fair of Hindoos. The number of pilgrims who flock to Pooree during the festival is variously estimated at from fifty to fifteen thousand. The chief festival of the year consists of a grand dinner, which the journey of a thousand or eleven hundred miles, made by the pilgrims on foot, is rendered more oppressive to the intolerable heat, in spite of a very wooden pilgrim hall, chiefly consisting of fragile-looking women, must pass on, never halting for food or drink, or march, lest they should reach the halfburied spot too late, and find it in ruins at the various ceremonies which are to secure their salvation. We should notice, by the way, that the number of pilgrimages, and the persevering zeal with which they undertake and endure hardships of the journey, are diligently fanned by priestly emissaries, who go forth into every corner of the land preaching the necessity of this pagan worship and the efficacy of its rites, the offerings to the gods or rather to the cruel Juggernaut, who guard the shrines. By the time the wooden, fourteen-cart ures reach their desired haven, nearly one-half of the pilgrims have fallen victims to the rain arrives. Perhaps for a few days longer the sun may shine, and the wayfarers, refreshed by bath in some sacred tank, don the finery they have wrapped up in their little bright bundles, and come forth like radiant butterflies to flutter in and out of every temple and drink of the elixir of holiness, a draught, however, which is by no means "without money and price," for at every turn they are taxed by the wealthy priests, and compelled to give alms far beyond their ability. By the time they are shorn of every available coin, and have scarcely retained the sum necessary to purchase their daily meal of rice on their homeward journey, the rains set in in good earnest.

Each of the multitude so have secured a right to lie down anywhere under cover are deemed fortunate, even though they be packed closely as herrings in a barrel. Vast numbers have to content themselves with spending nights without shelter in the open air, in the pitiless rain, which pours down in sheets on the unshadable multitude. There is no option but to lie still, helpless and hopeless, literally sodden—soaked to the skin, without the possibility of a change of raiment, and, moreover, half-starved, because the rain is loose during the fall accumulations of filth from every corner, and overflowing each addition for drinking purposes, till the whole town becomes altogether abominable and pestiferous, and the lurking cholera and fever fiends start up on every hand, and hold high revel on a stage so admirably prepared for them. Of course, multitudes perish, and their unburnt and unburied bodies are left a prey to foul birds and dogs.—Home.

The rest of our life is of a whipped yarn, good and ill together; our virtues would be proud, if our faults worshipped them not; and our crimes would despair if they were not cherished by our virtues.

PRESIDENTIAL ASPIRANTS.

Gov. Cleveland Visits Buffalo, Is Given a Royal Welcome, and Makes a Speech.

The Republican Candidate Greeted by Large Crowds at Hamilton and Cincinnati.

CLEVELAND.

Cordial Reception at His Home.

[Associated Press telegram from Buffalo.]

Grover Cleveland returned to his home this city to-day, and was received with an immense ovation. At Utica and Rochester he was met by crowds of people who made no speeches, he was enthusiastic and cordial. At Rochester he received a telegram signed E. Prentiss Bailey, saying: "Your friends in Syracuse have arranged to have you stop at that place without infringing upon your time." He was making longer time toward Washington than usual. A few hours before he reached Rochester, twenty-seven cars of Democrats passed him, and at every stopping-place some about to join the Democratic ranks, cheered the train. At Rochester he was equally enthusiastic, on reaching Buffalo he was surrounded by crowds, in spite of the drizzling rain. The streets were hung with bunting and Democratic mottoes, the residence of Mr. Cleveland's most brilliant appearance. Mr. Cleveland was escorted to his home by a procession which took two hours in passing the Cleveland House, and it is calculated that at least twenty-five thousand people in line. It taken 12 school children the traverse, the procession was composed of Democratic clubs from all parts of the city, and was the most imposing ever seen in Buffalo. Mr. Cleveland was escorted to his residence by the Grand Horse guard, a body of mounted men, the Hon. Martin, President of the Manufacturers and Traders' Bank, in a topical address, referred to the course of which he remarked that in the past, he had been a Democrat, and had voted for his party, but that he had never been a "boss" or administration, and pronounced it a disgrace that the Democrat party should be regularly bossed, and been board to say that in the past, the Democrat party had been the tools of partly or self-superior to the public interest. He said that the Democrat party was now in a position to redeem itself, and he felt satisfied for the best interests of the whole country, he hoped to see the Democrat party. Mr. Cleveland's speech was follows:

"Mr. Martin, I am hardly left the people of Buffalo long I resolve to shift, and how I am back again. I am glad to see this confidence and cheer of my fellow-citizens. I have resided among you, and in this city, where all my success in private life has been achieved, for nearly thirty years. To-day I come to you, after a long absence, that has occurred in all that time, and I am glad to see that the kindness of my fellow-citizens has not an event has happened of an more importance to me, and that places the whole world in contrast to me. I am glad to see I not my fellow-countrymen to share, while I am not ashamed to say that I have not been ashamed of my fellow-citizens, and I am not ashamed to say that I have not been ashamed of my party, I am ever in favor of the interest of the city, I am value its interest and welfare. Whatever I was able to accomplish for a little community was largely due to your strong and intelligent support. I am glad to see that the kindness and enthusiasm you gave to my brother, for the high office which I now hold in the State, and I assure you that in my estimation I have received no greater encouragement than the approval of my fellow-citizens of my home. I was and heard to-night has touched me deeply. I am glad to see that the good feeling and good will of the city of which I have been already their assistance in my efforts to show their confidence in me, and I am glad to have to come I shall deem myself not leaving my home, I am glad to see that I have the confidence and appreciation brought last and to-night, I am glad to see that I have the confidence and appreciation of my fellow-citizens. To the Young Women of Michigan.

I desire most earnestly and prayerfully to reach, by my voice or pen, the heart and conscience of every young lady in this state; or every state in this republic.

This is a blessed age in which we live. It is our age and our time to do noble and grand work for "God, and home and native land." It is an opportune time to work for self, and the dear ones to whom our hearts go out in sympathy and love, to those who cluster around the fireside now, and to those who follow after, bearing our names and the impress of our own lives and character.

It is a time when the young men of this country are forming characters for time and eternity. When every man is saying to his brother-man "this is the way, walk ye in it," though it be the way of death to body and soul. With the young men so easily influenced for good or evil the young women of to-day must associate or live (possibly bear their names and share their fortunes through life, for weal or woe. Then is it not the greatest importance to the young women that they lend their influence and encouragement to temperance and purity in everything that shall enoble and build up character for truth and righteousness? If there is any class of people who should be intensely interested concerning temperance it should be the young women. The bear is full of possibilities for good. Shall we stand idly by and say the bottle is not ours? God forbid that we should be so recreant to duty or principle!

So we urge our Young Women's Christian Temperance Union. Put up the motto "For God, and home, and native land," show your colors for temperance. By so doing you will strengthen others and fortify yourselves in the good work, and encourage and help the young men, also, "to dare to do right." Oh, who can estimate the influence for good, if our young ladies would only take a decided stand for the right. Dear young friends, will you give the bugle call, now—now for prohibition? Will you organize at once and take up the grand work of the W. C. T. U? Will you arise and say, "As for me and my house, which I have or hope to have we will labor for the prohibition of the liquor traffic?" And we want you to say to the young men, "Be strong; quit you like men."

Dear young friends, you need the influence, the culture, the recompense that comes from this work to fit you for a nobler womanhood, to help you to better understand the responsibilities of this wonderful life, and its relation to the higher life, to the home, and the state. Will you step into the work now, while the waters are troubled, and help others to do so, that we as individuals and as a nation may be healed from the direful plague?

As state superintendent of the department of heredity, I have plans of work that I should delight to have the Unions adopt, especially the young women's union. If such union will appoint a superintendent for this work who will confer with me, I shall be glad to send them.

Origin of Names of the Fabrics.

Everything connected with one's business is for importance. Very few dry-goods men know the origin of the names of many of the goods they handle. They may seem trivial points, but they are of interest to the man who seeks to be thoroughly familiar with the merchandise in which he deals. For the information of such we give the derivation of the names of the following goods: Damask is from the city of Damascus; satine from Zaytown in China, calico from Calicut, a town in India, formerly celebrated for its cotton cloth, and serge calico was also printed. Muslin is named from Mosul in Asia. Alpaca, from an animal of Peru, of the llama species, from whose wool the fabric is woven. Buckram takes its name from Bucharia; fustian coupe from Fostat, a city of the middle ages, from which the modern Cairo is descended. Taffeta and tabby from a street in Bagdad. Cambric from Cambrai. Gauze has its name from Gaza; baize from Bajac; dimity from Dametta, and jeans from Jean. Drugget is derived from a city in Ireland, Drogheda. Duck comes from Touque, in Normandy. Blanket is called after Thomas Blanket, a famous clothier connected with the introduction of woolens into England about 1340. Serge derives its name from Xerga, a Spanish name for a peculiar woolen blanket. Diaper is not from D'Ypres, as is sometimes stated, but from the Greek diaspros, figured. Velvet is from the Italian vellato, woolly (Latin, vellus—a hide or pelt). Shawl is the Sanserit sala, floor, for shawls were first used as carpets and tapestry. Bandanna is from an Indian word, signifying to bind or tie, because they are dyed in knots before dyeing. Chintz comes from the Hindoo word chint. Delaine is the French "of wool."—Trade Journal.

—Scientific engineers say that the bridge over East River is the last long bridge that will ever be erected, and that, had engineers known as much in 1870 as they do now, this bridge would not have been erected. Tunnels are to take the place of bridges.—N. Y. Tribune.

—The Rio Grande Sugar Company Cape May County, N. J., have now 1,300 acres of sorghum under cultivation. They have more than doubled the capacity of their works, and look forward to a very prosperous season. The cane is growing finely, and an excellent crop is anticipated.

A Laboring Man for Congress.

The laborers and mechanics in the ninth district have another opportunity to send to congress a fitting representative, this time in the person of judge S. S. Fallass. They have for years and years maintained that only the rich, and friends of monopolists and gigantic corporations, received the nominations, and hence the poor man has no chance of representation. Happily for all who have to struggle and contend with the adversities of this life, the action of the Ludington convention has placed at our disposal a genuine representative of the working man.

Judge Fallass, our nominee, has been from childhood educated to toil and labor, being brought up on his father's farm in Kent county, Michigan. Plowing, dragging, seeding, reaping and toiling from early morn till late in evening was his hard lot, variest only by short terms at the district or corner school house. When eighteen years of age, he, in common with thousands of other young men, became restive under the monotonous toil of farm life, and started out in the world for himself. He had read Horace Greeley's advice, "take $200, young man, and go west." Not being possessed of such wealth, he could not closely follow the old philosopher's directions; but he could do the next best thing: go without the money; and he did. Possessed of the laudable ambition to make his own way through the world we find young Fallass ploddling toward the setting sun. Of the hardships and privations we pass over. He found the far west just as it been by those who had preceded him. Money was be had but by the hardest kind of work and privation. Fallass was not discouraged, and took the first employment he could obtain. There was plenty of work to be had on the railroads then penetrating the great west, and there young Fallass laboured. He again grew restive—the toil was laborious, the living rough, the compensation small; and with his hardearned wages in his pocket, he laid down the pick and shovel, and turned his eyes and footsteps toward the dear old state of Michigan.

Closely did he pursue his studies, diligently did he apply every moment of fitting himself for profession, and in due time he entered Michigan's famous free-for-all university. Here he was steady, patient and frugal, and in 1872 honored himself, family and friends by graduating therefrom. His next step was to find a location where he could subsist, at least for the time being, and work industriously for success in the profession he had determined to follow. He looked over northern Michigan, which, twelve years ago was much more of a wilderness than today, and selected Wexford county for a permanent home. He soon made friends, and his quiet, gentlemanly demeanor, his democratic manners, and his straight-forwardness and industrious habits soon bore good fruit. Trust after trust was confided in him, and everyone was filled to the better. A democrat in politics, he was like an oasis in a desert, so strongly republican was and still is Wexford county, but his neighbors and acquaintances thought none the less of him; on the contrary they respected his political opinions, as he did theirs; and when the office of prosecuting attorney was about to become vacant, soon after his arrival, the people elected him thereby by as fine a vote as was ever recorded for young man in a new country. When Clam Lake now Cadillac, had aspirations to become a city, no one person aided more to secure the legislative act than Silas S. Fallass, and very speedily after it was accomplished, Mr. Fallass was made city attorney of Cadillac.

During the "county-seat fight," Mr. Fallass was supervisor of his ward, and he did Herculean work during all those troublesome times in settling for over a vexed question common to all new counties. Later he was appointed by governor Jerome to the high office of circuit court judge, and in the fall of 1882, had the proud satisfaction of being elected his own successor by a large majority over the republican candidate Mr. Alexander; his vote in the district being even larger than that cast for governor Begole.

The personal appearance of judge Fallass attracts and commands attention everywhere. He is under forty years of age, of splendid physique, weighs about two hundred pounds, has a clear, honest countenance, is possessed of fine intellectual qualities, and has a character and reputation, both public and private, that is unsullied. No act of his has ever been questioned. He is a man of the people and for the people. As a lawyer he stands the peer of any in his district; as a judge he is known for his fairness and impartiality. In his nomination for the high office he has filled so acceptably, the men and not politics was the over shadowing question with the people, and the bar of his district were as unanimous for his election as the great majority of the voters.

His nomination for congress at Ludington was also as spontaneous and unanimous; the democrats recognized in him the man for the place; the greenbackers the man for the place; the laborers the man for the place. He was the hearty choice of all the anti-republican element of the ninth district so fully represented in the late convention, and as such is before the people for their suffrages.

With judge Fallass in congress, the Herald firmly believes the district will be represented as the opposition has long, but in vain, demanded it should be represented. There will be no class legislation; every act of judge Fallass will be against the few and for the county. There is but one thing for the anti-republicans to do to bring about this grand result. Stand shoulder to shoulder, write for him talk for him, work for him, from now till November 4, then vote for him. We have a majority of the voters in the district with us; the people are with us in the great fight now raging for the people's cause. Let us all, each and every one, do his part toward placing judge S. S. Fallass in the seat now so discreditably held by general Catcheon in congress.—Big Rapids Herald.

Notes and News.

Fusion with democrats in Michigan is "bastard coalition," but with the republicans in West Virginia and Missouri it is an honorable alliance for a noble purpose. At least that is the verdict of the average republican organ.

A circular has been issued by the commander in chief of the G. A. R., calling attention to the laws of the order on the question of mixing politics with its work. Chap. 5, Art. XI, R. and R. says: "No officer or comrade of the grand army of the republic shall in any manner use the organization for partisan purposes, nor any discussion of partisan questions shall be permitted at any of its meetings, nor shall any nomination for political office be made." The circular also suggests that "the wearing of a grand army badge or uniform at a political meeting is in the highest degree improper, and comrades should refrain from so offending against the spirit of our rules and regulations."

The B. & O. Red Book for Michigan is ready for distribution, and in more than one respect, is the most valuable of any of the editions hitherto issued upon this state. As has always been the rule, the forwarding of a stamp to C. K. Lord, Baltimore, is all that is necessary to secure a copy, and in fact the only way, as the Red Book issues are all for and circulation. The present volume is replete with political statistics and condensed dates, not only as regards the latest presidential, state and congressional elections in this state, but relating as well to elections since admission into the union. It would be difficult to imagine a more complete showing of past results in the state, or a more neatly put together and printed little book.

Gen. Catcheon has not the "walk-away" this fall that he had two years ago. Judge Fallass is a clean, strong man, and his friends will see that he keeps up with the ticket. The Big Rapids Herald, in mentioning this matter, says: "In Judge Fallass the opposition have a candidate against whose private or official character not a word, true or false, can be uttered. He is a clean man and hence has the hearty and unanimous support of every anti-republican in the district. It is, therefore, fair to presume that he will at least keep up with his ticket. Governor Begole received a majority over Governor Jerome of 266 two years since in this district. From information from all over the ninth, the Herald is sanguine that Judge Fallass will be as strong, if not stronger, than Governor Begole. Taking this view of it, there is but one thing for the opposition to do to secure success—work unceasingly from now till the ballot box closes. Leave not a stone unturned to elect Fallass over Catcheon. Talk for him, labor for him—see that every anti-republican does the same. Do not trade, but use every honorable means to secure him votes."

A SON-in-law, called the Honeymoon, has appeared at Brussels. The editor assures us that he has secured the escapade out of a doctor of law and of an experienced gynecologist. The business of this latter functionary will be to find illustrious ancestors for Dr. O who think their prospects of marriage will be thereby improved.

THE Mormons claim that their one wife system is the best. But recent statistics show that in the Salt Lake "stake" alone no less than 323 persons "draw support" from the relief societies, and that out of a total population of 23,753. The entire Mormon population, including not only all Utah, but the stakes in Colorado, Idaho, and Arizona, is set down by the latest figures as 158,576.

REVIEWING a book on the weather of 1883, the British Medical Journal says: "We often hear a great deal about the dampness of our climate as a cause of disease, of the respiratory organs especially, but as a matter of fact the death rate and the amount of rain fall do not appear to stand in any definite relationship, whereas a spell of cold weather produces an immediate and notable effect."

EX-SENATOR DAVID DAVIS has, since his marriage, exhibited the spirituousness of youth and a jovial sociability which is notable even in the characteristically amiable and happy life of simple-mindedness which he led for so many years. He greets everybody with a pleasant smile, and talks as enthusiastically of the brightness of life as does a boy of 20.

A FRIEND of Lieut. Grody thinks that this Lieutenant is such a firm believer in military disciplinarian, having been told to stay on Lady Franklin Bay, he will there remain and perish, if he if does not reach him, rather than disobey military orders. Lake Casualtonian. Grody will perish at his post. This is a fine, heroic view to take of Grody's fate, then, nobody would blame him if he worked his way to Littleton Island.

W. T. SLATTON, of Greenville County, South Carolina, is blind, but this does not deter him from accomplishing as much as his relatives and neighbors who have their sight. He rides on horseback or mule-back for long distances, and drives with facility. He drove to Greenville the other day, bought a new buggy, hitched his horse to the new vehicle, gathered the lines, and was soon on his way home. Mr. Slatton can feed a gin perfectly, run a circular saw, and transacts most of the business for his family.

FIFTY years ago Dr. Fick, of Erie County, Pennsylvania, murdered a man before his son's wife. The dreadful sight bereft the lady of her reason, and her child came into the world with a diseased brain, that manifested itself most fearfully in after life. An unbroken line of manifestations followed, demonstrating the truth of the scriptural prediction relating to the sins of fathers being visited upon children unto the third and fourth generation. This has been literally fulfilled in the Fick family. Recently the last member of this ill-fated family died at Erie, after suffering for years from the hereditary disease caused by the shocking murder committed half a century ago.

THE Attorney-General wears shirts elaborately ruffled in front and at the cuffs, standing collar, a black stock, and an old-fashioned fob chain, with a heavy gold seal. His white fur beaver hats, made on a no-limitation of the old hell style, are worn alike winter and summer. His hats, clothes, and shoes are made in London. In his study Mr. Brewster sometimes wears a blue cloth smoking coat, but he oftener appears in a fancifully embroidered velvet jacket, cut of the short sleeve of which peep from a fine linen shirt, his cuffs and collar. Notwithstanding the fact that he continues to read a antique style, Mr. Brewster could not be called anything but a well-dressed man, and the dignified manner in which he walks along Pennsylvania avenue shows that he is aware of the fact that his dress attracts attention.

IT is not generally known that Mrs. Fremont's presence of mind saved her husband from a humiliating experience, and probably kept California for the United States. After he had started on his ninth famous exploring expedition, enemies in Washington succeeded in getting a bill through Congress recalling the military of the expedition. Mrs Fremont had orders to forward by courier to her husband anything of importance that came after he left, and she could easily have overtaken him within three or four days. But she quietly suppressed the order, Fremont went on his way rejoicing, and California was saved to the Union. A stronger story was made by General Fremont, but it slipped on the threshold of his expedition, and he was honored instead of rebuked.

THE seasonal of Southern Florida is to be brought into competition with Ceylon, the Malaisian Commonwealth, coast of India, the tropical islands of the Pacific, the West Indies, and South America, where pineapple groves of cocoanut trees may be seen. An enterprising capitalist of New Jersey, who sees millions in the project, has started an extensive plantation of cocoanut trees in Dade County, along the coast of Southwestern Florida. One hundred thousand plants have been set out on a tract of about 1,000 acres at a cost of nearly $40,000, and next winter the number will be largely augmented. The plants were placed in holes three feet beyond from twenty to thirty feet apart. It requires six years for the trees to begin to yield returns, but it is estimated that in ten years the grove will pay 10 per cent. on a valuation of $2,000,000.

GEORGE W. CABLE spent a recent Sunday with friends in Moscow, Mass., and attended the Congregational Church, and was invited to talk to the Sunday-school in the afternoon. In the course of his remarks he raised his hand, expanded his digits, and said: "I have so many children at home. How many is that?" "Five," piped up a youngster promptly. "And half of them are girls," continued the speaker, staggering his audience with his apparently reckless disregard of the truth. "How much is half of five?" asked Mr. Cable. "Two and a half," repeated the fully replied a little miss in the front pew. "Yes," said the novelist, with a benignant smile, as he saw that his reputation for veracity was fast slipping away, "two and a half of them are girls and the other two are half a dozen girls." "Oh!" gasped the little miss, with a look of relief, and then there was a ripple of laughter.

ONE of the most remarkable suits on record is about to be heard before the Supreme Court of North Carolina. It grows out of a mortgage on his own person, made by a white man named John Hands, of Pitt County, securing Jim Tabor, a colored plowboy, for a debt due him. This deed reads: "I, John Hands, of the County of Pitt, in the State of North Carolina, am indebted to Jim Tabor, of the State and county aforesaid, in the sum of $25, for which he holds my note, to be due on the 11th day of January, 1883, and to secure the payment of the same I do hereby convey to him these articles of personal property, to-wit: Myself, to work with him long enough to pay this debt, but on this special trust, that if I fail to pay said debt right away, then he, the said Tabor, or his assigns, may sell me at the Court House door for cash or credit, as he thinks best, after giving twenty days' public notice of three public places, and apply the proceeds of said sale to the discharge of said debt and interest on the same, and costs and expenses of making such sale, and pay the surplus, if any, to me. Given under my hand and seal this, the 11th day of January, 1883." Hands failed to pay the amount due, and Tabor was at liberty under the terms of the deed, to sell him at public auction. Some time before the expiration of the twenty days grace allowed the mortgaged debtor the news got out, and the Court House green was crowded with people expecting to witness the novel sale of a white man. An injunction was granted by the Supreme Court, and no sale took place. The Supreme Court will hear the case.

A Bug's Speech on Tobacco.

My friends, you see I've come up here
To talk to you about
The tobacco question,
Now, I know that we are a very sickly,
And don't we get it?
Tobacco is responsible for this and that
And the other.
Corns, one, one, one, two, one thousand,
Two corns on my left foot,
Three corns on my right foot,
Right corn, second one, dance on the corn!
Ow! I have a bad one.
Tobacco is responsible for corns, pimples,
Bad breath, and bad luck.
Now, how can it be, I say, that
Such a little, little, little
Bug can do all this?
Tobacco!

A Story of the Revolution.

More than a hundred years ago, one night in October, Mrs. Hempstead took her sampler out under the damask plum tree, where she could sit upon a rock, and cross-stitch the letters of her name, while at the same time she watched her little brother Joshua, to see that he got into no mischief.

Patty was 8 years old, and a lively little maiden. She had proved too bright a pupil already, and had made a short for her father. She had learned to spin wool, too, though she was not tall enough for it, and had had her own lay a thick plank on the floor beside the wheel, for her to walk upon, style she curried the threads.

But little Joshua was not yet four, and all the work he had to do was to amuse himself as well as he could. But Patty, "with all the baking I have to do to-day, and my mind so worried at the same time, I can't have Joshua under my feet holding out the skeins in his hands."

So Joshua was let out back out of doors, twisting grasses round his fat, bare toes, while Patty talked to him.

"I'm so worried about my mother almost," she said; "it isn't whether the owsell take good. It's only Mr. Hempstead. I do smile to the thought he might, and hound father talking about it."

"The British can't come here," said Stephen, who had his arm round his sister's waist, and pretty fashion he was in, so long as Cousin Amelia was at the back.

"Father wouldn't let them, either," said Patty, gravely, "nor anybody else, only Tories."

"Guess I'd hide in the cellar if they come," said Joshua. "Where do you hide, Patty?"

"Why, I hold all the chairs and go down cellar," said Patty, with a decision that showed she had had to hide goods. "You know some of the prisoners from the provisions are stealing from us, and barrels of molasses, and things. We could have no dance."

"Why, I'd like to dance," said Cicero, "and dodging and then, fogging up the British, so you don't know which end you are."

"Somebodies the matter with Cicero's elbows! I'm tired of his elbows in the oven, and put her brown bread in to bake. She was expecting company Eastward her dear sister-in-law, and company, in colonial times, was company."

"Patty! Patty! Cicero did not pinch you from the oven, he put up in the back, but did get me some walnut leaves to dye for Cousin Easter's tea. Take them with you."

So Patty had to her sampler, and, and the little boy had to hold a half, to cross over the lots, together leaves from the low lanyard bushes. For the women folks were very fond of using the tea-leaves for the real tea, which was so much taxed.

That night Patty went to lie awake and cry near her father and mother to be about the times, and then she little Joshua had asked her to pinch him, because it could keep awake in spite of all their plans, they were both sleeping soundly before they knew it.

The dark, still, peaceful night boundout all over New London town, but some anxious hearts kept vigil while the children slept. At dawn a cry arose, the alarm was given. Stephen Hempstead rode through the streets of the settlement, shouting:

"Women and children, make your escape! The enemy is upon you!"

Cicero, who was quick of hearing, heard the alarm, and ran to his little master, who was awake by her mother.

"Hurry, child! Dress yourself, dress yourself, and dress Joshua! We must run for our lives!"

Patty, trembling, began to put on her clothes, while her mother, over a dress, twisting grasses round his fat, bare toes, while Patty talked to him.

Mr. Cornickbank withdrew from the contest with honors to himself. He held steadily the solid delegations of both parties from his own county and four of the democratic delegates from Ramsey after the complimentary vote to Dr. Calkins. He held these delegates until he saw the contest was hopeless, when he gracefully withdrew and joined in making the nomination of Mr. Flower unanimous.

Mr. Cornickbank is a gentleman of the highest character, and his friends are legion. He will be a strong candidate for the next democratic nomination for state treasurer, and if he should be nominated he will be a strong and popular candidate.

Mr. Flower is a young man of great promise, and his nomination will be very acceptable to the democracy of the state.

For Representative, Charles S. Hampton.

The democratic and greenback conventions to nominate a candidate for representative in the legislature for the Lamed district, convened at Petoskey on Tuesday afternoon, the former at the parlors of the Cushman house, the latter at the Occidental.

After preliminary work, the parties met in joint convention under the two-thirds rule. An informal ballot was taken, showing 12 votes for A. D. Cruickshank of Charlevoix, 13 for C. S. Hampton of Harbor Springs, and 11 for Dr. Collins of Petoskey. Another informal ballot was taken, with but slight change, when the convention proceeded to a formal ballot, as follows:

Necessary to choice	24
A. D. Cruickshank	17
C. S. Hampton	19

The balloting proceeded with but slight variation for fifteen ballots.

The convention then adjourned for supper.

After supper the 16th ballot stood:

Necessary to choice	24
A. D. Cruickshank	16
C. S. Hampton	20

Mr. Cruickshank's name was then withdrawn, and the nomination of Mr. Hampton made unanimous.

Mr. Hampton is a young man of energy and ambition, and as a political organizer, as well as publisher of the Independent, has made for himself an enviable record. His executive ability is unexcelled, and as a public speaker he makes himself clearly understood. Firm in his convictions, he is persistent alegest to a fault, and representing workingmen in fact, he will become their untiring champion in the legislative halls at Lansing. His residence of eight years in the district has made him a host of friends who are determined to see him elected to the first and only office ever accepted by him at the hands of the people.

Mr. Cruickshank withdrew from the contest with honors to himself. He held steadily the solid delegations of both parties from his own county and four of the democratic delegates from Emmet after the complimentary vote to Dr. Calkins. He held those delegates until he withdrew his name, because they believed him the best man for the place and the most likely to insure success to the ticket, and when he wants or will accept a similar office they will be just as ready to stand by him to the end.

Charlevoix is entitled to the representative, but as the choice must now come from Emmet, we submit gracefully, and shall undertake to overcome with the workingman's candidate the large republican majority of two years ago, which added to the fusion majority of Emmet and Cheboygan will elect Mr. Hampton handsomely.

Fraud in the Auditor General's Office.

Geo. W. Stone, who was a few weeks ago summarily bounced from a clerkship in the Auditor General's office, has given to the public a statement in which he charges that Wm. C. Stevens "in his official capacity as auditor-general violated a law of the state and had for his own benefit perpetrated a fraud upon every person doing business at his office. On the first day of October, 1883, the law provided that certain state tax lands should become purchasable, at one quarter of the tax originally assessed, the first applicant to have the first choice of purchase. These sales excited great interest among land dealers; people came or sent agents from all parts of the state to make purchase. It is a fact well known, and was widely commented upon at the time, that many of these parties sat up all night in order to secure the much coveted privilege of making the first application. A line was formed and the moment the door was opened there was an exciting race among the applicants to be the first at the desk. It is also a well known fact, which can be attested by scores and hundreds of people, that William K. Prudden, of this city was the lucky and agile gentleman who first reached the purchasing desk and made the first lawful application. But letter register "O," of 1883, page 510, which records the applications of that day are as follows.

Application No. 26,377	W. C. Stevens
Application No. 26,378	W. N. Stevens
Application No. 26,379	W. N. Stevens
Application No. 26,380	Charles D. Palmer
Application No. 26,381	William K. Prudden
Application No. 26,382	George W. Preston

Now I charge that auditor-general W. C. Stevens, by clandestinely putting in these four applications in advance of Mr. Prudden, who was the first lawful applicant, perpetrated a fraud upon every party doing business at his office; and I further charge that in perpetrating this fraud in his own interest he violated one of the plainest provisions of the statute, which expressly prohibits "an officer or clerk employed in the state land office or in the office of the auditor general of this state, during the term of his service or within three months after the discontinuance of such service, from purchasing, either directly or indirectly from the state, at either of said offices, any lands for sale at said offices or either of them." That this law was well understood in the auditor's office is shown by the fact that the deputy auditor-general on the proceeding day publicly notified the clerks that they would not be permitted to make applications for the purchase of those lands. It is too clear for argument that the fraud and violation of law charged by me upon auditor-general Stevens is a fact beyond denial. And I challenge explanation or refutation of my statement. The laws of the state, and the records of his own office, prove my charge. And I leave it with auditor-general Stevens to explain, if he dare, how the application of Charles H. Palmer, in addition to his own, happened to be given preference over that of Mr. Prudden. I make no comment. I leave the case with the public."

A reporter of the Detroit Free Press interviewed the auditor general on the truth of this matter, and that gentleman admitted that the records made such showings, but claimed ignorance of their existence until Stone's statement was made public. The Free Press however, has proof that the auditor-general, his deputy, book-keeper, and at least one clerk knew of the irregularity at the time, and the clerk who detected the fraudulent transaction of the three principals has been retained in the office to keep him silent.

Let the books be opened. Remove the officer and let the people know how many other irregularities are covered by bribes and defective memoriales.

The people demand a change.

A Hungry Python's Breakfast.

"This is the fellow who gobbled up the kitten," said Mr. Burns, of No. 115 Roosevelt street, as he pulled a box into the middle of the store and carefully lifted the lid. A large python lay contentedly coiled up in the bottom and lazily lifted his head and blinked at the observers, while a number of monkeys who had spied his authority from a couple of cages began jumping wildly from side to side and set up an unearthly screeching, in which some three hundred parrots and cockatoos heartily joined. A black cat that had cautiously crept up and sniffed the box humped her back, thickened her tail, and spit.

"That's the mother of the kitten that the snake ate," added Mr. Burns. The python was a splendid specimen of his kind. He was over twenty feet in length and ten inches thick. The kitten must have been pretty well digested, for there was no abnormal bunch in the snake's body to indicate where it lay. Mr. Burns received this and two other African pythons two days ago, and neglected to nail down the lid of the box that held the East India snake. In the morning, after the arrival of the snakes, when he entered the store he noticed the old black cat walking about as if in search of something and mewing pitifully. He suspected that something was wrong, and soon after discovered that the python had made his escape from the box. He found him at last coiled up in an empty barrel in the rear of the store. He was in a bad humor, and made a dash at Mr. Burns, but the latter was too quick for the reptile, and seized it by the neck. "The fellow then tried to coil himself around me and give me a squeeze," he said, "but I knew how to handle these animals, and didn't give him a chance. I put him into his box and shut down the lid. He is quiet enough now, and will remain so until he gets hungry again."

The other two pythons are smaller and their bodies are of a darker color. Mr. Burns gently shook one box and the snake raised his head, darted out his forked tongue, made two or three crooks in his neck, and gazed steadily at the reporter. "He's going to make a grab at you," said Mr. Burns, and slammed down the lid. "I know when these fellows mean mischief. Do they bite hard? Well, they can draw considerable blood, and their bite smarts. I've been bitten several times and have had two or three tight squeezes, but I grab them around the throat and then I know just how they intend to coil. They can't fool me now any more."—New York Times.

Boston Slang.

"Dear dear, where have you been girls," said a Boston mother to her daughters, who returned late from an entertainment. "We've been carriding the municipality," giggled the eldest. "And observing the pachyderm," laughed the second. "And voolforating the female to an extraordinary elevation," chimed in the third. "Dear, dear, dear!" exclaimed the mother in expostulatory tones. "There's no harm done, mamma," pouted the fourth; "everything is smashio, and the fowl, whom cockling was the salvation of Rome, is suspended at an altitude hitherto unknown in our experience."

THE GAME OF LIFE.

AS SUNG THERE.

This life is but a game of cards,
With mortals eager to learn;
Each shuffles, cuts, and deals the pack,
And each a trump doth turn.

Some have a high card to the lead,
And others some a low;
Some hold a head-card or two of trumps,
While others none can show.

Some shuffle with a practiced hand,
And such the game they know,
Nor care how others fare, they are dealt,
Where all the leaders are.

Thus cards are made the disguise of games,
What, you see each there hold?
And this is very wise, indeed,
Where most winds blow.

When playing, some throw out the ace,
The king, or any card,
Some play the deuce, and some the ten,
But none play the hand.

Some play for money, some for fun,
And both for stakes of gold;
Just as and the game is played out
Each takes some, or none, or all.

When hearts are trump, we play for love,
And pleasure, rather than for gain;
Neither do we see a deck out yet
In spades, I can boast.

Wednesday, we think, was a very wise day,
Our cards we saw in play;
Some of us, I know, were present at top
Who had a deck to lay.

Yet, I know, some have thrown the top
The pile to make a fine deck,
And have never seen the game, or cards,
Nor the deck, I mean, and half.

Bright sons, in this deck to play,
Dull, with a full, sober face;
Some to win with some good cards,
And lose with some bad.

Where cards are turned back on the way
Do some, and some not;
Yet these best are the players
When chips are laid in hand.

Low games of all is when the spade,
Or diamond, is head of them;
Yet always does the flowing game
In city against clubs.

Nor matter how matters in game was,
Or how much in each game,
The spade will finish up the game,
And dig the player's grave.

THE SURGEON'S DOWARDICE.

BY SAM B. DOME.

It was in a handsome sitting-room of the show car "Tennessee that a lovely girl was sitting, with her beautiful eyes of the deepest blue fitted to Cupid-Hatter's profile face with a look of intelligent sorrow.

She was Harrie Harter, the old Captain's only child, whose lightest wish had ever been a law to her father before; but now, in his daughter's estimation, at least, he was not only unkind but unjust.

"The match is forward," said Capt. Harter. "Why, he looked as pale as a sheet when Jack's fists was set, and his teeth fairly chattered with fear."

"But, papa, it might not have been fear. Because my nerves would never allow me to stand up, even while I was being done so, much less act."

"Why, you little simpy, the man pretends to be a surgeon, and a surgeon should delight in chopping and sawing into human beings just as if they were salmon and cod."

"But, papa, I have seen a young man faint at the sight of a knife, and he was a surgeon, too."

"Pshaw! I know all about that case; he's only a soft-nosed, kid-glove, high-toned, Boston sawbones, and doubtless he fainted at the sight of a knife, and he was a surgeon, too."

"Well, papa, I know I should faint at the sight of a knife, and I know I should be very nervous and unfit for a surgeon."

"And you might see something you did not like; such as a lion constrictor or a lion," added her husband.

"Oh, there is no danger," said the Captain. "Harrie has always been willing to go and see one of them, and I have almost a mind to gratify her with this time, and get upon party and go out."

"How so delightfully nice that would be!" said Mrs. Atherton, exclaiming in ecstasy. "Don't forget to invite me, Captain."

"As I then thought, I have almost a mind to go, and I will invite you, Mrs. Atherton, and you, Mr. Harrington, and Mr. Adams, and Mr. Jack Harter, and Mr. Jack Harter, and Mr. Jack Harter

Board of Supervisors.

Board met Oct. 13th. Full board present.

The committee on equalization reported that they had examined and compared the assessment rolls of the county, and recommended that they stand equalized as follows:

TOWNSHIPS.	Real Est. Assessed.	Personal Assessed.	Total as Equalized.
Bear Lake	68,400	8,000	$66,200
Boyne Valley	101,225	20,825	97,500

Springvale	53,025	5,230	55,356
Wilson	148,969	6,300	148,254
Total			$2,477,902

The report was accepted and adopted.

The committee to settle with the superintendents of the poor reported that there had been expended during the year for the support of the poor of the county the sum of $1,848.06, as follows: Pond $502.29, fuel $2.50, medicine $202.22, nursing the sick $175.45, burial expenses $34.00, transportation $96.34, rent $5.00, hire $19.45, stationery $4.75, fees $45.30, clothing $90.44. In addition to this, the following amounts have been expended in the townships named: Wilson $90, Charlevoix $198, Hudson $96.25, South Arm $100, Eveline $100, Springvale $100, Hayes $100. For rent of county farm, $25 have been received and deposited with the county treasurer. "We think that if the county farm is not sold, that it ought to be fenced and a well sunk, and we would recommend that the superintendents of poor be instructed to let the business of clerking in the year, to the lowest responsible bidder." Report accepted and adopted.

On motion the superintendents of poor were instructed to make the improvements named, viz.: fencing farm and sinking well.

The committee on salaries of county officers reported recommending the following amounts: Sheriff $150 per annum, prosecuting attorney $500, treasurer $500, clerk $500. Report accepted and adopted.

On motion board adjourned to Oct. 17th.

Board met Oct. 17th. Roll called; quorum present.

A petition was received from H. E. Sheldon, asking the board to further define the hours and fees for running the ferry at Boyne.

Mr. Ward offered a resolution fixing the hours and fees as follows: When the ferryman is running the ferry shall run from 5:30 in the morning till 7:00 in the evening; when the ferryman is not running the ferry shall run from 6:00 in the morning to 7:00 in the evening; on Sundays the ferry shall run from 8:00 to 10:00 in the morning and from 2:00 to 4:00 in the afternoon. During the above hours the fees collected shall not exceed the following: For double teams 30 cents, single teams 20 cents, horses 10 cents except sheep, sheep 10 cents up to 40, over 40, 2 cents, footmen 5 cents, threshing machines and like articles $1.00. During the hours of the day not included in the above, the ferryman may charge and collect double the above fees.

The committee on rejected and charged-back taxes reported the total amount to be charged back to the county by the auditor general to be $42.31. This amount is spread at large to the townships as follows: Eveline $14.00, Charlevoix $7.16, Chandler $6.56, Melrose $16.59.

The committee on claims reported recommending the allowance of the following:

The bills of A. H. Williams and S. C. Graves of $25 each, and of F. A. Radour for $2.10, were returned to the board for their action.

After some discussion and explanations the three bills were allowed.

The committee to settle with the county treasurer reported that they had examined the accounts and vouchers of that officer, and found them all correct.

The committee on ways and means reported recommending that a tax of three mills on each dollar of the equalized valuation of the county be raised for county purposes, making a total of $7,281.36. Accepted and adopted.

Mr. Jordan offered a resolution that the Charlevoix and Petoskey state road be discontinued, it having been found impracticable, and the necessity for the road ceases to exist. Carried.

Mr. Ward moved that the bond of the next county treasurer be fixed at $30,000. Carried.

The sealed bids for the county printing were opened. The work was awarded to the Elsie Jordan Enterprise at $20.

Board took a recess till afternoon.

A motion by Mr. Palmiter that $500 be appropriated to assist the erection of a bridge across intermediate lake, was laid on the table until the January session.

Mr. Harris read a communication from J. L. Whitmore, in reference to taxes on certain lands in Charlevoix county. Referred to the county treasurer, with instructions to answer.

On motion of Mr. Blair the clerk was instructed to draw an order at the end of each quarter to pay the county pensioner.

On motion of Mr. Bailey, the clerk was instructed to draw orders to pay the county canvassers when they meet.

On motion of Mr. Harris, the special committee to settle the county clerk's account with the county treasurer, was made an order for the next January meeting.

The committee on apportionment reported that they had apportioned the state and county taxes as follows:

TOWNSHIPS.	State Tax.	Co. Tax.

LAST RALLY.

Chas. S. Hampton, fusion candidate for representative in the state legislature, will address the people at Charlevoix on Friday evening, October 31st. Everybody turn out and give Mr. Hampton an enthusiastic reception.

Democratic Representative Committee.

At the convention in Petoskey Oct. 21, the following district committee was appointed:

Charlevoix—J. Milo Eaton, chairman.

Emmet—C. J. Pailthorp.

Cheboygan—W. F. DePay.

The committee were instructed by the convention to base the representation on the population of counties.

A Foiled Ballot.

Every elector is entitled by law to vote a folded ballot. No supervisor or inspector of election is authorized to unfold a ballot and examine it to see "if it is straight." On the contrary the law expressly prohibits him from doing so, in the following language, sec. 164 of the statutes of Michigan:

"When a ballot shall be received one of the inspectors, without opening the same, or permitting it to be opened, shall deposit such ballot in the box."

Any elector whose ballot is thus opened should not only consider himself insulted, but should make formal complaint against the offending official for violation of the law.

For State Senator George Parmelee.

This gentleman we have never met, and know little of except that he is a prosperous farmer and fruit grower of Old Mission, a conscientious, faithful greenbacker and an uncompromising foe to republican misrule. This is record enough to commend him to the consideration of honest progressive voters. He is an old resident of the district, and has many friends who will see that the republican majority of two years ago is very much reduced if not entirely overcome. If elected, he will represent one of the chief industries of the district, on which depends the actual permanent development of this region. He is in fact the workingman's candidate.

Another Dodge.

A ticket is being circulated to trap unwary voters, ostensibly to boom the Butler electoral ticket, but directly help Blaine. In addition to the regularly nominated seven greenback electors the names of six other greenbackers are given, and a state ticket made up from the republican and fusion tickets. Look out for them. Do not be deceived by thinking you are helping Butler's cause. Every vote cast for the extra greenback electors is a half vote for Blaine. We warn every elector to know positively what he is voting before putting the ballot in the box. Again we say, do not be deceived by the headings, but read your ticket, and see that the names are the same as published in this paper. Look out for bogus tickets.

Effect of Free Trade.

Examples in history confirm the teachings of political economy.

Venice, Holland, England, Spain and the United States are striking examples. Those all attained their greatest or most rapid development by means of free trade.

Blanqui says: "We could wish no other argument in favor of free trade than the prodigious development of Venetian industries during the long reign of that freedom. The decline began with protection."

Holland during its free trade period was the general store-house of all products of all industry, and their ships the carriers of the ocean.

Spain rose under free trade to be a dominating power in the world, but degenerated to a nation of beggars under protection.

England protected for centuries was reduced to beggary. Enjoying free trade for forty years she has become the greatest nation of Europe. Wages have increased sixty per cent. and are higer than anywhere in protected Europe. Want, pauperism, and crime have decreased one-half, she furnishes mid does the carrying trade of the world.

From 1850 to 1860, under free trade, the United States enjoyed its greatest prosperity. In the leading lines of wealth, in population, foreign commerce, railroads, in capital, wages and products, in manufactures, in value of farms, its progress was greater than it ever has been since under protection.

Against these solid and stubborn facts the brethren of protection may rage in vain.

A Successful Failure.

A republican meeting was appointed for Barnard school house Monday evening, Oct. 27. Mr. R. L. Corbet, republican candidate for prosecuting attorney, was the speaker. A union meeting was also billed, Prof. Hansley appeared for the union; the result was a joint debate. Mr. Corbet opening, Prof. Hansley following, and Mr. Corbet closing. The best of feeling prevailed and the general verdict was that the professor had the best of the argument, and supported it with reliable proofs. Three cheers were given for the union ticket with a will. Three cheers were offered for Blaine & Logan, but only one was given by one man and a boy. Mr. Corbet looked crest-fallen—and Charlevoix county is safe for the union. **

Every voter should know that his name is registered Saturday.

A Temperance Argument.

Viewed from merely an economic standpoint, the consumption of intoxicating liquors is a national evil of such gigantic proportions as few people fully realize. Without considering the mental and moral effects of whiskey-drinking, the loss of health and character engendered by the debasing habit, its great drain upon the resources of the country and the capacity of the people for advancing their material interests is sufficient to procure the speedy indictment of the traffic as a public robber. Some interesting statistics recently gathered show the amounts expended annually by the people of this country for some staple articles of use to be as follows:

Bread	$505,000,000
Meat	369,000,000
Iron and steel	230,000,000
Woolen goods	237,000,000
Sawed lumber	233,000,000
Cotton goods	210,000,000
Boots and shoes	196,000,000
Sugar and molasses	155,000,000
Public instruction	85,000,000
Missions	6,000,000

During the same period this country paid for intoxicating liquors the enormous sum of $900,000,000. Here is abundant food for reflection. The two important items of bread and meat cost us annually $100,000,000 less than our liquors. Our bill for iron and steel goods, woolen goods, cotton goods, boots and shoes does not equal our whiskey bill, while the insignificant amounts expended for public instruction and for the work of missions would just about pay the interest on whiskey bill if we should let it stand for a year. These figures are not fanciful. They are gathered from reliable statistics, and as temperance argument they are business-like, and they are absolutely unanswerable.—Farmer's Union.

The Elections in Ohio and West Virginia---The One Republican, the Other Democratic.

OHIO.

The election in Ohio on Tuesday, Oct. 11, was for Secretary of State, a Judge of the Supreme Court, a member of the Board of Public Works and members of Congress, and mainly officially returned as we write by the Associated Press the day after, it issues only the check in Hamilton. A Republican majority of 15,000 in 1877, it is now Democratic by 5,000 or more, and every county has gone Democratic except Republican Union Columbiana, Ohio, Carroll, Clarke and Washington counties. Of the Republican majority close to report Republican claim Lucas by 1,500, Stark by 800 and Fairfield by 300. Democrats claim Lucas by 1,500 majority, Stark by 1,000 and Fairfield by 300. It is thought about 60 votes will decide the Supreme Court election, which, according to the last reports indicates that Okey, Democrat, has been re-elected by 1,000 votes. Democrats claim the election of Okey, Republican, by 1,000 votes. Allen, Republican, has lost Hardin, Mercer, Monroe, Paulding, Putnam, Van Wert and Wyandot counties, which gave overplus votes. Everhes calls the Democratic majority in the Senate, 17, and the Republicans, 16. Frank Hurd, who is a member of Congress, claims the Democrats have 17 Senators.

A press despatch from Cincinnati says: The returns received from all parts of the State are sufficient to show that a decisive change has been made in the political complexion of the State. Democrats claim the increase is very marked. Another Democratic claim is made by the public men who personally preside over the three great political parties. Both the Greenback and Republican parties claim considerable increase, and the vote was so distinctly marked over the Presidential ticket that been before the people. A score of good surprises in the large vote received by the Republican candidate for Judge of the Supreme Court. Where was gained a majority of one hundred and fifty in Cincinnati, the Republicans claim to have

Roscoe Conkling is out for Cleveland.

William F. Storey, of the Chicago Times died last Monday night.

The Cheboygan Democrat gets $175 for doing the same official county printing done in this county for $60. How do these figures strike our people?

The "straight greenback" ticket mentioned in another column was "nominated" at Lansing by a half dozen bolting, sorehead greenbackers. Beware! Don't meddle with them.

Every laborer, every mechanic, every voter who desires to cast his ballot for honest government, should fall into line and support heartily the people's candidate for congress, judge S. S. Fallass.

David Preston, prohibition candidate for governor, does not and has not rented a building in East Tawas to be used as a saloon. The story is a falsehood originating with the Rhine organ in Detroit.

The best business men of New York joined in a Cleveland demonstration last week, which eclipsed everything of the kind ever attempted. Over 25,000 men were in line, and 200,000 sight-seers were on the streets.

Cadillac Times: Judge Fallass made rattling speech at Big Rapids Wednesday night, and made many votes thereby. The judge is getting to the front rapidly, and surprises those who have not heard him speak before.

Frank A. Dean of Charlotte, in a tariff speech last Monday night, likened the infant (!) industries of the country to a full-grown, healthy man, and "brought down the house" by asking the audience what they would think of a six-footer if he should go to his aged mother and in a pleading tone of voice ask her to nurse him for a little while.

Chas. S. Hampton, of Harbor Springs, editor, orator, and general good fellow has been nominated for the legislature by the fusionists in his district. Charles is a standard bearer in the army of bold Ben Butler, and has a head full of well assorted brains, copper fastened lungs, and a voice that may be heard afar off.—Evening News.

The reports which come to us from the ninth congressional district of this state are most encouraging for the union candidate, judge S. S. Fallass, of Wexford. Most of the counties in the district have heretofore been strongly republican, but the indications point to a considerable breaking up of the majorities there. Muskegon, Manistee, and Newaygo promise to better their record of even two years ago, when great things were done in those counties for the cause of good government. Judge Fallass is a man whose life and record richly commend him to the people of his district as one in every way worthy of their trust. He is an earnest, honest, strong man; and it can be said of him that, if elected to congress, as we think he will be, he will not mutilate in the congressional record the speech which he made on the floor of the house. As much cannot be said of his opponent.—Free Press.

Charles S. Hampton—born on farm in Lenawee county in 1856—his father was one of the earliest leaders of the republican party—got mashed on Charles Sumner and named his son after him—in 1858 went to northwest Texas with his parents who engaged in raising stock—the old man was too much of a union man, and in 1862 had to "light out" for the north—family followed soon after, and Charles' first recollections are of these stirring times—lived at Hudson during the war and at Muir after—entered Adrian college at 15 years of age—graduated at 18—started out as a pedagogue—principal of Potokey and Harbor Springs schools—in 1878 started the Harbor Springs Independent, and has published it ever since, triumphing over all difficulties—born a fighter and leader—was captain when he played soldier, captain of base ball clubs, leader in all games and sports—now wants to run the political machine, and is a fusion candidate for the legislature—secretary of the west Michigan press association—president of the state press association—secretary of his county agricultural society—president of the county teachers' association—fills all official positions with credit to himself and satisfaction to others—five feet eight inches tall—weighs 140 pounds—dark complexion, dark hair, mustache and eyes—struck by lightning when 14 years old and has been full of electricity ever since—brilliant campaign speaker—full of vim—and has a firm belief that Ben Butler is the biggest man on earth—has Ben's picture in his bedroom and says his prayers before it when at home—whistles'em when not at home.—Evening News.

CAMPAIGN SUPPLEMENT.

JUDGE FALLASS LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

CARIBOU, MICH., SEPT. 25, '84.

HON. HENRY A. HOYT, CHAIRMAN of Democratic Congressional Committee:

It is true as stated in the letter of the Hon. Chairman of the Democratic Congressional Committee, that I was nominated by the Democratic Congressional Conventions of the Ninth District, and that the nomination was made without my knowledge or consent. It is also true that I was not present at any of the conventions, and that I did not even know that I was a candidate for Congress until the result of the last convention was made known to me by the public press. Under these circumstances, I felt that I was not in any way responsible for the nomination, and that I should be under no obligation to accept it. I should have so stated at the time, but I was then in the Upper Peninsula, and was not in any way connected with the political affairs of the District. I was not even a member of any political party, and had been for years, and was not in any sense a partisan. I had been a Republican from the time of the organization of the Republican party, but had been for years so far from being a partisan that I had not even been a member of any political party, much less a partisan of any party. I had been for years a student of the political situation, and had come to the conclusion that the interests of the country would be better subserved by the success of the Democratic party than by the success of the Republican party, and had so stated to my friends, and had voted the Democratic ticket for several years, but had never taken any part in the political contests, or even been a member of any political club

The Sentinel this week drops Mr. Ingalls and defends his own candidate. Tis well. In the future just cause let the opposition candidates come.

Ben Ingalls has a record as sheriff now opposite. He catches his criminals and keeps them. We want officers who can and will act promptly and effectively.

W. A. Atchison left us some green corn this week, sweet and tender as most corn earlier in the season. He says it is California "prohibition corn," and will be fully matured in 1888.

The young hopeful bible class, led by the pastor of the M. E. church, has been reorganized for winters work. All not personally connected with the school are invited to fall in rank.

Mrs. John Beatty, of New Orleans, a former resident of this county, writes to a friend in Charlevoix that they are prospering there and have built up a good business and a home with pleasant surroundings.

Work on the new village hall progresses finely. The roof is completed, and as soon as the window caps arrive the outside brick work will be pushed rapidly. It will make a valuable addition, to that part of town.

C. R. Bellinger has recently opened a fine assortment of new jewelry and silverware, and a lot more will arrive on the next boat. His silver sets suitable for holiday presents will become an attractive and important feature of his display.

What the JOURNAL said last week about the republican candidate for sheriff came through reliable men. Had we known positively of facts more damaging, as we do know of other candidates, we should not have used them if our own candidate had not been made a target for abuse by the Sentinel.

Ben Ingalls may have "resided in Charlevoix county less than two years," as the Sentinel says, but he has resided in this community,—in territory of which Charlevoix county forms a part,—long enough to serve three terms as sheriff. This gives him the necessary "experience," etc., to entitle him to the office.

As a boy we were educated not to fight. We were also educated not to run. As a journalist we do not wish to deal in offensive personalities, but we cannot see our own political candidates smirched without showing the inconsistency. Most men have weak spots, and the pencil may be made to find them if necessary.

The ladies aid society of the M. E. church will have another tea-cout tea next Wednesday evening, at the residence of Mrs. Dr. Graves. Tea will be served from 5:30 to 9:00 o'clock. Being close to Bridge street business men and clerks can get a good supper cheaper than they can go home for it, without loss of time. Everybody invited.

About noon Wednesday, the Pennsylvania City house ice-house, a small detached building, was entirely destroyed by fire. The wind was from the south which alone saved adjoining buildings, as it was impossible to get water with the hand engine. This is one instance where a hook and ladder outfit would have been valuable in tearing down to smother fire.

It is stated by good men and not as a "campaign lie," that last summer Mr. Berdan was watching a man who was confined in a room at the Fountain City house for lack of a pill, and some time during the night he went to sleep and the man tore up his sheets, made a rope of them, and escaped through the window to the ground. We ask the voters of Charlevoix county if that is the kind of a man they want for sheriff.

Several slurs on the temperance column now running in the JOURNAL by a committee of the W. C. T. U., have recently appeared in the Sentinel, which are a little out of place. If the items partake of democracy it is the fault of the facts and not the committee or the paper in which printed. As we understand it, the majority of the committee are republican, and they are not restricted in their assertions by the editor of the JOURNAL. The space was asked of both papers. The JOURNAL granted; the Sentinel refused. We may or may not endorse the sentiments expressed, but the ladies are entitled to a hearing, and shall have it,—political or not.

South Arm.

Hunters are on the warpath. Samuel Whiteford killed a deer.

Crops are all harvested, except rutabagas, and their time has come now.

It is rumored that Mr. J. Bowman has bought the store building of E. A. H. Cole.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Norton, of Charlevoix, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Kent, recently.

Miss Nellie Empey, of Banks, is stopping at the Eagle Hotel for a few weeks.

About $30 worth of volunteer work has been put on the new road coming to South Arm from the west. Our commissioner would confer a favor by appropriating some more money on that road immediately.

Some of the South Arm people went over the lake to hear a discussion from Rev. J. Redpath, of Boyne in the new church. The church is nicely finished, and is a credit to the members and a benefit to all.

One of our South Arm merchants is spending his leisure hours training his neighbors fowls and will probably soon start on a tour of the continent. Barnum must look out for his laurels.

Burgess.

Mrs. Gibson, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Freels, of Louisville, Ky., for the last year, has returned to her homestead in Hayes. Her husband, Josiah Gibson, whose health is very much impaired stays there until spring, when he will rejoin her.

It is rumored that Mr. Austin and wife intend to move up to her homestead in Hayes.

The farmers in Hayes have the most of their fall work done.

The nomination of C. S. Hampton for representative is giving satisfaction to the voters of Hayes.

Mrs. Zillah Gibson, whose husband died in Vendenbill, has come back and is staying with her mother-in-law, Mrs. Gibson.

Communication.

EDITOR JOURNAL,—In your issue of Oct. 23d I find two or three items replying to the mud-throwing by the Sentinel at Mr. Ben Ingalls. I consider it entirely uncalled for, and regret that it drew out the remarks about Mr. Berdan; but I am glad we have a paper in Charlevoix to defend the right. It is not that Mr. Smith is so radically temperate, * * * but because he is too full of a low partisan spirit. Those who know Ben Ingalls longest love him best. * * * I believe if elected, he will make the people of Charlevoix county a good live sheriff.

JUSTICE.

[We have a batch of communications denouncing the Sentinel in no very mild terms, which are omitted.]

Not a Candidate.

Mr. Richard Cooper announces that he is not an independent candidate for sheriff, and advises his friends to support their own party nominations.

We understand that the card published yesterday was not written by Mr. Cooper, but authority given verbally to make some such statement. Mr. Berdan's name was inserted without his intend, as he preferred to let his friends make their own selection.

Ironton.

Rev. C. F. VanAuken is home again, and will preach here at the school house next Sunday afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

Hayes.

Four new members have just been received into the first congregational church of Hayes.

A Special Notice to Our Readers.

The Cottage Hearth is, as its name indicates, a home magazine, and to those who are acquainted with it, needs no higher commendation than to say it is better than ever before. For ten years it has had a steady growth both in circulation and literary quality, and now is a most excellent home magazine, crammed full of good things, among which there is always something to amuse or instruct every member of the family. Its poetry is by some of our very best writers, its short stories entertaining, its descriptive sketches most attractively written and its articles on gardening and other home subjects are of great practical value. Special features of this interesting magazine are original stories and poems by the best American writers and among its recent contributors we notice Edward Everett. Hale, Lucy Larcom, Celia Thaxter, George McDonald, Louise Chandler Moulton, Joaquin Miller, Mrs. A. M. Diaz, Thos. S. Collier and R. J. Shillaber. Its departments of music, fancy work, floriculture, fashions, receipts and household hints are filled each month with articles of great practical worth, and will prove invaluable to ladies. We would especially commend to our young readers the Young Folks' Department where they will find puzzles and games with prizes offered for correct solutions. In fact, the magazine from its old-time fireplace on its front cover, all through its well-printed and beautifully-illustrated pages, is wholesome and interesting, and taking the magazine, all in all, we do not see how a family can get along without its monthly visits. We are therefore glad to call our readers attention to the fact that we offer the Cottage Hearth for a year free of charge, to anyone who will send us $5.00 with one name for the JOURNAL one year. If you want to see the Cottage Hearth before ordering it we will send you a free sample copy. Those who are already subscribers can send the JOURNAL to some friend, and have the magazine for themselves.

BEECHER VS. BLAINE.

A Caustic Letter from Henry Ward Beecher to Candidate Alger, of Michigan.

James F. Joy's Opinion in 1877 of the Plumed Pirate of the Kennebec.

A Partially Obliterated Tattoo Renewed with Artistic Skill and Vigor.

(New York telegram.)

On Sept. 27 there in New York Herald, in its evening edition, appeared a letter addressed to Henry Ward Beecher and signed by the chief clerk of James F. Joy, who placed Mr. Blaine in nomination in 1876, and said to Mr. Beecher that Mr. Blaine, while Speaker of the House of Representatives, had accepted the bribe of Credit Mobilier stock, which should comprise certain members suitable to his purpose, and that so he had retained or thought—meaning that Mr. Joy should take our Mr. Blaine's bonds $20,000 worth of Little Rock Inclined bonds. The story remained uncontradicted until Sept. 30, when Mr. Blaine, in a letter to Mr. Joy, in London, the story was coming from Mr. Beecher, with the response, "Nothing else or not it wanting. To the Mr. Joy replied, on the same date, as follows: "Blaine never made me any offer to procure a commission to sell any Illinois mineral or farm, or for any consideration whatever. Blaine never had any Credit Mobilier stock. The Credit Mobilier stock was given in very plain terms well contradicted. Mr. Blaine of the story of Mr. Beecher's correspondent. The letter will contain specifically and in detail Mr. Beecher's account of Mr. Joy and Little Rock affair. Mr. Blaine's proposal to him, the money received, and the return of the money. Mr. Joy said this Mr. Beecher will deny Mr. Joy or any one else to contradict." Mr. Beecher's letter will go from Paris. In the will say in so many words that his knowledge of the affair unsolicited, came to him in the ordinary course of trust or his intimate friends, but that he has known it for more than a year, and that the presence of his name in a letter with the press and interest in this city by all who are aware of the situation. The following is the text of the statement by Mr. Beecher as given by the Herald: "Mr. Beecher said in New York, he said, "I have no wish to be a party to it. I know Mr. Blaine's name came up in connection with Credit Mobilier stock, and I thought he knew Mr. Blaine to be a good man, and went on to give his reasons. As well as Mr. Beecher remembered them, they were to the effect that Mr. Blaine was a young man in behalf of a Southern railroad in which he was large interested, and which was threatened with hostile legislation in Congress. Mr. Blaine being Speaker of the House. A committee was to be appointed having special power over the matter. Mr. Joy asked Mr. Blaine, in the interest of his friend, to place Mr. Joy on a certain committee. Mr. Blaine gave no answer at the time, but the next day an intimate associate of the Speaker came to Mr. Joy and said that Mr. Blaine had decided to make Mr. Joy the man. Mr. Joy said he was not a lawyer, which is of what country and that if Mr. Joy would take them off he would do what he could. The intimate associate said that if Mr. Joy would make up at least to the extent of not more than two direct associates, he would be satisfied the bargain. This was Mr. Beecher's recollection of the story as told him by Mr. Joy. He received this in his general details in a psychologic the statement made in the letter. Mr. Joy's letter added that he had the letter with a public address, and that some days after he received a message from Mr. Blaine begging him to call on Blaine, Blaine at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Mr. Joy said he had no business with Mr. Blaine, which was true, since Mr. Joy had left Cooper Union during the battled success, in which Mr. Joy had been with Mr. Blaine at Hotel. I can hardly believe that he has forgotten this, which will be Mr. Blaine in the public place with which Mr. Blaine in the country. Mr. Joy said he was not a lawyer, and that he never made against any other Republican candidate since the government began; yet I can not allow myself to be misled by sympathy with his unbridled kind-heartedness, courage, and generosity.

"Upon such testimony, gathered from gossipy, pointless in judicial methods, dim and imperfect in the distinction between truth and untruth, absurdity and falsehood, but shortsighted in its methods of conducting his business, and, with a cool, sweet impudence and a sublime faith in the credulity of the people, he asks for the candidate, his would make a dangerous President.

I pray you to excuse my adding to the cares of your canvass by a consideration of these matters. Mr. Blaine, you, and I are in the same boat. I have addressed to you the telegram to Mr. Joy, and have made the same request of Mr. Joy, and have made the same request of Mr. Blaine.

HENRY WARD BEECHER.

BLAINE'S CROOKED RECORD.

As Pictured by the "Original Blaine Organ," Eight Years Ago.

SUGGESTIVE OF A SCHEME.

The people of the United States do not want a man who has been whimpering before a clerk of the House of his personal letters; the nation has no use especially at Inchtown to be carried through a session by a Speaker.—Chicago Tribune, June 25, 1876.

WHAT MR. BLAINE DID.

Mr. Blaine was one of the committee (Messrs. Fisher and Caldwell should and should fully have asked power to had reclaimed the Little Rock and Fort South Railroad Company from the Credit Mobilier, and Blaine did all he was asked of him and paid back the money. Blaine rolling as Speaker of the House, so he did the Illinois commission, which should have passed the bill in the Senate. Mr. Blaine did all this at the time he was selling money to the Credit Mobilier, a commission arrangement for some of the Little Rock and Fort South Railroad bonds.

WHAT BLAINE FAILED TO EXPLAIN.

Mr. Blaine has had the contract in a various explanations to give a great line as to the money received from Stettinius's custody.

Mr. Blaine's friends have been and shall explain the money received from Stettinius and Credit Mobilier stock. The actual value of bonds (no nominal value of $12,000, worth about $8,000 in cash) Blaine has received in the account of this large donation by Mr. Blaine was justly in the hands of Stettinius, and Blaine knew it.

Mr. Blaine has so far proposed to explain what he calls his transaction with Little Rock.

They must have been very valuable to have induced the agent of Stettinius to pass over to at least a 50 per cent. upon a note which amounts to a gift of $12,000 to Blaine. The money matter display was entirely passed over and not read by Mr. Blaine, with the remark that it was unnecessary, and was opposed to the rules of the House.

EVIDENCE FILED MOUNTAIN HIGH.

Mr. Blaine made a speech in Congress yesterday. He read fifteen or sixteen letters from Credit Mobilier stock. These letters instead of being a vindication, seem to pile evidence mountain high that Blaine was guilty. He read letters to Congress, his faces are acting and explaining, and he read letters to Congress, his faces are acting and explaining. In one of the letters he refers to the business made to himself as a "favor." In another he speaks of his action in the Fort Smith and Little Rock Railroad bill, which Stettinius and Credit Mobilier had to carry through by the company.

Mr. Blaine's letters show that he is a man of character of a grander and superlative in the securities of questionable corporations, as he has shown himself to be in other ways, and he has, he says, in secrecy and confidence. Instead of a vindication, Mr. Blaine's letters pile up the evidence.

The reason why Mr. Blaine's friends have been so anxious to have the Credit Mobilier matter in the shape in which it is in Congress is that Mr. Blaine's friends have made many publications of several letters and which is satisfied on all sides to be genuine.

Mr. Blaine's letters show that he was a stockholder in Credit Mobilier.

A capitalist, who knows Blaine well, explains the transaction of the purchase of the Little Rock Railroad bonds. Blaine's friends have made a publication that two capitalists, Fisher and Caldwell, had offered to transfer to a number of the passage of a resolution by Congress, which would have given them several millions of acres of public lands in aid of the road, and authorizing the company to mortgage the road and franchises to secure the money to be expended in the construction of the road.

Fisher and Caldwell offered to give Blaine and there was a special effort made, both in vain, to induce Blaine to accept the offer. Blaine refused, but it does not appear that Mr. Blaine at any time, or in any manner, was "rolling." On the contrary, it is asserted that he gave it to be his duty to oppose the bill, and he made a speech against it.

Mr. Blaine's friends say the letter to Fisher, published above, was a part of the stock he was, and pointed out an advantage of this stock in speculation, and the most favorable construction that can be put upon this matter leaves Mr. Blaine in the position of a lobbyist for selling certain railroad stocks for sale and speculation, while he was a member of a committee which had had forced with Speaker of the House of Representatives, who passed up the decision of Blaine's own disadvantage by his ruling to specify who was the person who was the person who was to be to be to be

ORIGIN OF NIAGARA.

How the Great Cataract and Gorge Were Formed.

A reporter of the Courier who was at Niagara falls yesterday was more than ever impressed with the grandeur of Niagara's chasm. He saw long black lines marking of the various formations of the mighty abutments, and could not help wondering the enormous length of time the watering forces of nature had required to dig out that solid rock and make the deep gorge.

The desire to obtain accurate information on the subject directed his steps later to the office of Dr. Julius Pohlman, in the Lewis block. Dr. Pohlman is one of the most prominent geologists of these parts.

"With great pleasure I will tell you anything I know about Niagara," said he. "In tracing the origin of this river about whose banks cling such recollections of mystery and tragedy, we must go away back into the pre-glacial times when the bed of the great lakes was occupied by a river and Tonawanda valley contained a lake fifty miles in length and from ten to twenty miles in width, with a possible maximum depth of sixty feet. The northern barrier of the lake was of limestone formation. Being about fifty feet lower than the southern one, the overflow of water was toward the Ontario valley. The outlet found its way into the present channel of Niagara river somewhere near the upper rapids of the river above the falls.

"From here the waters met no obstacle, and in their flow predetermined the river gorge between the falls and the whirlpool, and continued in a straight course north, through the side of the whirlpool, and thence through the valley of St. David's in Canada and onward through the Ontario valleys. I have made careful searches, and find this track of the river from the whirlpool through Canada. By and by the Tonawanda lake began to subside, and finally was reduced to a river with a wide, low valley on each side. The course of the river in making its way out of the valley of the ancient lake changed. It flowed into the channel of the present Niagara where the present Tonawanda river enters now. It curved around the southern margin of Grand Island, which formed a shallow part of the northern margin of the lake, and had arisen as a peninsula in the course of time, and then flowed north into the original channel of the outlet, thus determining the two branches of the present river. The branch of the Niagara which separates the island from the main land is of quite modern origin, as testified to by soundings. Well, the erosion across the thin bed of Niagara limestone naturally cut one or the other parts of the outlet deeper than the rest, and confining the smaller channels gave birth to a number of larger and smaller islands, known at present as Goat, Bath, Long, the Sisters, and so forth.

"The branches of the river joined again into one stream as they approached the heavy Niagara limestone as about the stand the new suspension, or foot bridge, and rushed north for about three-quarters of a mile, where they fell over a precipice of about one hundred feet. Goat island extended northerly in a triangular prolongation with its apex somewhere near of the northern end of the present American fall. Below this fall of one hundred feet that I have just spoken of the river descended in rapids over the slate until it encountered the Clinton limestone near the railway suspension bridge, where it took another leap. From here a short rapid carried it to the entrance of the whirlpool, where another fall was caused by quartzose sandstone of the Medina group. Thence there was a rapid current to Ontario basin. The volume of water then was exceedingly small as compared with the estimated twenty million cubic feet of the present. Now, at the time of the glacial period the movement of the ice sheet was in a northeasterly direction. The channel of the great river which I remarked about in the beginning was excavated deeply and the valley of the great lakes was formed. When the Arctic climate again changed into a temperate one, the ice sheet retreated northward and in its melting spread over the land all the ground-up material as well as the rocks which had been caught up and carried under, and the valleys of St. David's, Tonawanda, and others were more or less completely filled up with drift. The channel of the old Tonawanda river from the whirlpool on also became choked in the filling process. After long ages the ice disappeared and the bed it had occupied became the seat of the chain of great lakes. At this time Lakes Erie and Ontario formed two large bodies of water and were at the same level—that is, their surfaces were even with Lewiston heights. The waters in the lakes began to subside and a neck had appeared between them, extending from Buffalo to Lewiston. An outlet from Lake Erie was formed through this flat, and we have the present Niagara river."

"I have always been taught that Niagara Falls were originally at Lewiston, and were their way back," said the reporter.

"That is the popular theory, but it is erroneous. In that case we must suppose that Lake Ontario was lower primarily than Lake Erie. It was not. I have found traces of the beach which its surface touched up on the mountain side. Both lakes subsided together, and Niagara river worn out its present channel in flowing from one lake to another. Of course you understand it has required ages, thousands of years, to accomplish this work."

"Why didn't the river follow the old channel and empty through St. David's valley?"

"Because the valley was drift-filled; and there was a shallow valley from the whirlpool to Lewiston. The erosion was very rapid. It was the line of the least resistance. Hence the bend of the river at right angles at the whirlpool is accounted for. As the excavation of the lower gorge was progressing the falls of the pre-glacial river came again into action. The two lower falls became rapids and the upper fall began to recede in horseshoe form. The retrocession brought it to the apex of Goat island, opposite Prospect park, when the cataract divided and formed the American and Horseshoe falls. The northern margin of Goat island was quickly undermined and destroyed by the combined action of the waters, and was compelled to recede with the Canadian fall."

"Have the falls retreated recently, and if so, how fast?"

"We have few measurements, and it is a great pity. By comparing a survey made by Prof. Hall in 1847 with one in 1875, we find that the Horseshoe fall has retreated one hundred feet in thirty-four years."—Buffalo Courier.

Scientific Miscellany.

Recent discussions by English authorities show that doctors are far from agreement concerning the distance to which small-pox germs may be conveyed by the air. Dr. Bingham has supposed that infection could not be given at a greater distance than two or three feet in out-door air; Dr. Hill has placed the limit at five or six feet; Dr. Tatham, at six to eight feet; and Dr. Grieve at eight to ten feet. Others have given fifteen, thirty, fifty, seventy, 100, 150, 350 and 500 feet as the probable width of the dangerous zone around small-pox hospitals. Sir Wm. Jenner has insisted that it is half a mile, and several eminent physicians have favored the theory that infection may be disseminated to a distance of 7,000 or 8,000 feet. Sir J. R. Bennett has thought it probable that infection, like small shot or smoke, might travel a mile or two, and thus it is very possible that small-pox poison might strike a person at a distance of fifty miles from its starting point. Reviewing the evidence thus far presented on the subject, Dr. T. Wilson concludes that is not proven that small-pox infection in an active state is ever disseminated in the open air as far as 200 or even 150 feet.

Prof. C. Michie Smith remarks that a green color at the sun, though uncommon, is of much less rare occurrance than is generally supposed, as he has several times observed it since it attracted so much attention in India in September, 1883. He is disposed to ascribe the phenomenon to an abnormally thick stratum of transparent water vapor, and not to volcanic dust. Its rarity may be due, he suggests, to the fact that the water-vapor, when present in sufficient quantity to produce the appearance, is usually partially precipitated, forming clouds. An unusual atmospheric state may possibly at times give the air great clearness when highly charged with vapor. Prof. Smith points out that the air might hold enough volcanic dust to produce the sunset glows which followed the green sun of India, and still have its transparency unaffected and cause no change in the sun's appearance.

The mongoose, which was some years ago brought from India to stop the ravages of the sugar-cane rat in Jamaica, has increased in that island to such an extent, and has become so destructive to poultry and even to fruit and vegetables, that it seems liable to soon become a veritable pest. Since being introduced from Europe, the dog has become very numerous in a wild state in Australia, but, instead of confining itself to subduing the Australian plague of rabbits, it now causes a great slaughter of sheep. The weasel and the stoat which New Zealand people have imported from England to keep down the rabbits, have multiplied so rapidly that the remedy is expected to become more than the original affliction in a very short time.

Researches in France by Dr. Schultz have shown that citric acid possesses powerful antiseptic properties, which may give it as important place as a food-preserving substance, since it is believed to be free from the objection of unwholesomeness urged against other antiseptic acids. Meat fragments placed in a five per cent. solution of the acid were in a perfect state of preservation at the end of fifteen days. Experimenting upon organized germs, Dr. Schultz found that one drop of a solution of one part acid to 1,000 parts water placed in a liquid containing bacteria and other forms of microscopic life, instantly caused their death.

Mons. Balland has found that the average moisture of the flours of commerce is fourteen per cent. It varies with the hygrometric state of the air, and is generally from one to two per cent greater in winter than in summer.

Oil is now extracted from the seeds of grapes in Italy. Young grapes yield most, and black kinds more than white.

The Pacific Medical and Surgical Journal gives the increase of California physicians at 240 per annum, a number which the State cannot support. It appears that Los Angeles has a hundred regular physicians. The editor says that the doctors are ambitious to flourish in the large cities, and will endure "philosophical starvation" rather than settle in some thriving town where they might ultimately do well.

Harvard University has adopted the Sabbatical notion in a most useful form. It now allows to each of its teachers one year in seven for private study.

Two Peeps at Siam.

It is not a long circuit from the gate of the Captain's garden to that of the famous temple, but even that short distance shows us a few sights which would be sufficiently amazing in any other part of the world. A native house is gravely coming up the river by itself, the father steering it with a long oar, while the children watch its progress from the ladder leading down into the water from the veranda. Under the shade of a huge banyan tree, half a dozen bare-limbed, dusky Siamese boatmen are playing a kind of aboriginal lawn-tennis, using their feet instead of their hands to keep up the ball. Just beyond them, a small native child, with nothing on but the ornamental wreath which encircles the bristly tuft of black hair surmounting its otherwise shaven head, is admiring a magnificent butterfly, almost as large as a sparrow. A little farther on a group of amphibious youngsters are playing in the thick, greasy, soap-colored water, as Western children might play on land, while just across the river we enjoy a flotilla of light canoes laden with fruit and vegetables, and manned by Siamese market-women, who keep up a perpetual clamor of bargaining as shrill as a chorus of angry parrots.

But the moment we pass the deep, low-browed gateway all this vanishes as if it had never been. With one stride we go from the present to the past. The mighty ruins rise at once up through masses of clinging foliage, in the depths of the Java forests, could hardly look more lonely and forsaken than this strange old fortress of Eastern superstition. Upon every foot of its damp, slimy courtyard, its gaffed, crumbling walls, its storm-worn pilaster, its dark, tomb-like galleries, its voiceless cells and shattered images, lies the brand of grim and irrevocable desolation:

"The gateways of the Darmcotts are choked with fallen leaves,
And in the halls of Akanat her web the spider weaves;
The jackal and the serpent now their midnight revels keep,
Where the Princes of the East and West, once revelled and drank deep."

M. Pasteur sucks up the liquid containing the microbes of rabies through a glass tube to inoculate the unfortunate animals who die from hydrophobia a few hours after the poison is injected into their veins. This he is able to do with perfect safety, for the rabid virus is only dangerous when conveyed into the system through inoculation. The scientists is not yet certain as to whether artificial inoculation applied to a subject who has already been bitten by a mad dog would prevent the appearance of symptoms of hydrophobia.

At Madrid a few days ago an opera manager refused a famouse fire-eating a minstrep, remarking: "You dance like a chicken." The dancer's husband demanded an apology, but the manager denied having insulted the lady. The husband thereupon plunged a dagger into the heart of his wife's tradiuor.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

Adams & Allen, dealers in woolens, in New York, made an assignment. The liabilities are put at $150,000.

Burglars at Andover, Mass., took from the residence of Prof. Austen Phelps $10,000 in bonds, and from the house of Prof. John P. Taylor securities valued at $5,000. All but $8,000 of the amount was found in bushes near the latter's house.

Burglars who blew a safe in a store on Long Island obtained $1,000 in currency and deceived themselves with $10,000 in bonds in the Rockaway Beach Improvement Company.

In a coal train collision at Port Clinton, Pa., thirty cars and a locomotive were completely wrecked, and a fireman wounded. The financial loss is reported at $40,000.

At a crossing in Pittsburg, Pa., a train struck a two-horse wagon, one of the men on the vehicle being fatally hurt; one of the horses was thrown forty feet, striking a citizen who was standing on the station platform, killing him instantly.

A Uniontown (Pa.) dispatch says: "The worst fears touching the fate of the men who were imprisoned in the coal mine at Youngstown, four miles from this place, by the explosion of fire-damp which took place there at 4 o'clock last evening have been only confirmed. Six of the miners were taken out last evening soon after the disaster, two of them were dead and one of the other four is seriously injured that there is no hope of their recovery. This left from fourteen to eighteen men supposed to be still imprisoned in the mine. The exact number is not certainly known. The work of reaching these men was continued industriously throughout the whole night, and by this morning the dead bodies of twelve of them had been brought out and delivered to their friends and relatives at the mouth of the pit. This makes fourteen dead in all, and together with the four injured, accounts for eighteen, of the whole number supposed to be in the mine. The scenes at the mouth of the pit as the disfigured bodies of the dead were brought to the surface and given into the hands of the wives and relatives was distressing in the extreme, and vividly recalled to mind the piteous wails of the bereaved families who waited at the opening of the Lenoxville mine last February for the bodies which they knew were coming lifeless to them from the uncompanionable bowels of the earth. It was a sad spectacle, indeed, and moved to tears scores of hardened men who had been drawn to the place by the news of the disaster."

WESTERN.

The Supreme Court of Iowa has decided that Justices of the Peace have jurisdiction in cases under the prohibitory law where the fine is $1,000 or less.

A Pole named John Wenslewsky was executed at San Jose, Cal., for the murder of his wife. During his confinement he tried to stave off the hangman's noose by an insanity plea, but was completely overcome by fear.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Business failures for the week numbered 224, against 205 the preceding week, and the same number in the corresponding week of last year. Canada reports 19 failures for the week, against 20 for the week, says: "The financial outlook for the week, says: "The general feeling in the business community is one of continued depression. The volume of merchandise moved is smaller, and purchases from first hand are continue to be restricted. The opinion is widely held that no revival in business of any permanency is likely to be experienced this year. Generally mercantile collections continue backward, and heavier losses are being called on to carry those which have reason to look and receive extensions. From almost all directions generally there is reported union, except at the leading cities in Kansas, where the cooler weather has caused some buying, mainly of dry goods and clothing."

The notable event of Sir Moses Montefiore attaining his tenth year (he is) was celebrated throughout the civilized world by the Jewish inhabitants with great demonstrations of joy. Wherever a couple of Israelites were gathered together they discussed the grand character of the famous philanthropist, and there was not a man of them who did not feel a reflected pride from the honors which every nation in Europe bestowed upon the patriarch in the course of his long and honored career.

John Beckmey, formerly keeper of a dance-house in Helena, M. T., who dies some time ago in Prescott, Ariz., was tried for the murder of John Cross, a wealthy liquor dealer of Montana, four years ago.

George T. Jackson & Co., millers, failed at Augusta, Ga. Liabilities $100,000. John A. Shuler, paper-maker, Lancaster, Pa., assigned, with liabilities amounting to $[illegible]; Adams & Allen, woolen dealers, New York, also assigned, liabilities $150,000.

A steamer which arrived at San Francisco from Guaymas, Mexico, the other day, brought news of a mutiny on board of a vessel of Lower California. The steamer Espiritu de Sonora, which left Guaymas Sept. 29, was seized by the passengers and crew of 25, is believed to be lost with all on board. The American schooner Rosa is believed to be lost. Another storm occurred on the 7 and continued three days. Twenty houses at Port Frasinto were destroyed, a great number of cattle killed, and nine Mexicans composed, on board, all perished except one, who reached shore in a small boat. The storm was the most violent and severe ever seen in that region.

At Colima, Mazzanillo, and other towns on the western coast of Mexico, yellow fever of a malignant type is claiming many victims.

The schooner Lady Dufferin, from Chicago, was wrecked in Carrying, Lake Superior. The crew abandoned the vessel, and reached shore in a yawl boat, were picked up, and landed at Port Arthur.

FOREIGN.

A monster demonstration against the British House of Lords took place in Hyde Park, London. Over 80,000 people were present. Speeches of a decidedly republican character were made. Lord Salisbury and the Tory leaders were vigorously abused, and when the revolutionary "Marseillaise" was played there was tremendous applause. The demonstration created a profound impression at the Tory clubs.

It appears from the official statements of the British Government that the Tay bridge disaster and his party came to their death when carrying out orders of Gen. Gordon, based contrary to the instructions of his Government.

The municipal authorities of Limerick, by a vote of twenty-seven to five, have decided to the refusal to pay the increased tax upon policemen, the arrest of several members of the corporation is ordered.

The steamship Massilia, from Rotterdam, was found burning 500 miles from the coast of Ireland, and was abandoned by her crew and passengers, of whom no trace was discovered. The vessel was overdrawn in smoke and flames, and had evidently been burning for days. It is hoped that the crew and passengers have been picked up by a well-bound craft.

Advices from Peschadir London that a severe type of cholera is spreading through the French province, under Admiral Courbet, now blockading Formosa.

Admiral Courbet has telegraphed the French Minister of Marine that the sanitary condition of his troops is far from satisfactory. He fears that he will be compelled to abandon some of his projects against the Celestials.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Dr. Parot, of Washington, was chosen Bishop of Maryland by the Protestant Episcopal Convention in session at Baltimore. Dr. Parot was born of French extraction and a clergyman of New York, 55 years of age.

C. D. Cobbitt's People's Bank, at Canton, Ill., failed for $[illegible]. The assets are placed at $[illegible].

Owing to internal dissensions, the Ohio Base Ball Association, which has been a prominent single club, disbanded at Columbus after three days' session.

E. Power Palmer, connected with an insurance agency at Chicago, poisoned himself in a hotel with laudanum, evidently on account of poor health.

Lena Balsland, aged 11, died at St. Louis of trichinosis, the muscles and tissues of her body being found infested with pork parasites. Her little brother is ill from the same malady, and her mother, who passed away a month ago, is believed to have died of the disease.

F. A. Morey, formerly Governor of South Carolina, having been jailed at Detroit for extending a courtesy, merely succeeded in bringing himself in for well. When cut down he was black in the face, and had lost consciousness. On recovering he was interrogated as to his object in the house of Correction.

Maj. Pauline Briguoli, the noted tenor, died at the Everett House, New York. He had been suffering for the last six weeks with a complication of diseases of the liver and kidneys, and had been confined to his bed for three weeks.

Thomas Pollard, of Brookfield, N. H., aged 15 years, chained himself to a trunk long before his father's home, then set the house on fire and deliberately burned himself to death. A gang was found on one side of Richmond, made by a rotter, which was found near by. A rope was found dressed to his arms, saying he was tired of living. He gave no reason for the act, but it is thought to have been caused by unequalled melancholy.

Imitating Dr. Carver's company of cowboys, late at Hamilton, Ontario, hissed a bag named John Casey and dragged him a long distance, inflicting fatal injuries.

In the Superior Court at Montreal Judge Jetter ordered Hon. Thos. Ryan, ex-president for two years to be imprisoned for contempt in refusing to answer questions. Ex-Senator Ryan, President of the North Shore Railway, for embezzling money in the late elections.

Assignments have been made by S. Sells, a wholesale millinery of San Francisco; Isaac E. Hutchinson, a mining capitalist of Portland, Oregon; Wm. Sayles, a lime-dealer in St. Louis.

Denver (Colo.) telegram: "Rumors have reached here of a lynching by vigilantes of a gang of Arizona outlaws, captured while in camp on Rock Creek, in the Cove range of mountains, twenty or thirty miles west of Tombstone. No particulars are at present obtainable. The report is thought to be exaggerated.

A Profitable Office.

It conveys an idea of the laurel-wreaths of high places in England in the good old days" that in 1834 the then Attorney-General stated in the House of Commons that the late Lord Ellenborough had refused $40,000 for the office in his gift of Chief Clerk of the Court of King's Bench. When Lord Ellenborough heard that it was vacant he was on horseback, and, alighting, he wrote in pencil on his saddle his son's appointment, the groom being witness. The place is a complete sinecure, worth with perquisites, $35,000 a year.—Brooklyn Eagle.

USE has used in these days to set John Bull's chest and as our nation is the most closed and clamorous, to bring them to peace and order long ago added hours of prayer.—Sara F. Smiley.

WILBUR F. STOREY.

Biographical Sketch of the Deceased Proprietor of the Times.

A Life of Great Ambitions, Arduous Labors, and Brilliant Successes.

William F. Storey, editor and proprietor of the Chicago Times, died at his residence in that city, on the 25th of October, after a long and painful illness. He had been confined to his bed for several weeks, his physicians assigning as the cause of his prostration "a general breaking up of the system." Mr. Storey was born in Vermont, in the year 1839, and came West in 1859. He was a man of great ambitions, and his career was one of unceasing labor and great success. He was a man of great ability, and his ambitions were gratified to a degree that few men attain. He was a man of great energy, and his success was the result of his own exertions. He was a man of great courage, and his career was marked by many conflicts with his fellow-men, and he was a man of great generosity, and his success was shared by many who had been his friends, and all the same friends he made in his career. His influence, and the influence of the Times, which he created and developed, extended for many years. He had his enemies, and they were numerous, and bitter friends, and all the same friends

Tuesday Night's Dispatches.

Our returns were furnished by Dr. Crouter over the wire from Petoskey. They were read at J. Milo Eaton's office, which was open as democratic headquarters until a late hour. Numerous republicans took advantage of the excellent arrangements which had been made for receiving returns, and came there for their information.

Of the returns at large we have room for but a brief summary.

Sixty precincts in Boston give Cleveland 17,948, Blaine 11,428, Butler 2,157.

In two wards of Kingston, N. Y., Blaine's majority is 122, a democratic gain of 55.

Twenty-seven districts in Brooklyn give Cleveland a majority of 1,400.

One hundred districts in New York state gives Cleveland 41,675, Blaine 30,825, Butler 1,836, St. John 747. In 167 districts Cleveland's majority is 11,135.

Returns from Virginia indicate seven to ten thousand majority for Cleveland.

One hundred and seventeen districts in South Carolina give Cleveland 49,453, Blaine 21,436, Butler 944, St. John 504.

Two districts in Buffalo give Cleveland 604, Blaine 802.

Eighty one precincts in Boston give Cleveland 24,273, Blaine 15,511, Butler 2,840.

Democratic majority in Maitland, N. Y., will be 2,000 against 9,311 in 1880.

Nearly every district in New York city give Cleveland a majority.

Robinson, republican, probably elected governor of Massachusetts. Electoral ticket close and in doubt.

One district in Columbus, O., gives Cleveland over 100 majority.

Kings, Queens, and Richmond counties gives Cleveland 23,000 majority.

Thirty-one towns in Massachusetts, outside of Boston, give Blaine a majority of 2,600.

Providence, R. I., gives Blaine 3,000 majority.

Four wards in Cleveland give 974 net republican majority.

Eight precincts in Wheeling, W. Va., show a democratic loss of 214, since October election.

Cleveland's majority 455 in Waterbury, Conn.

Miami and Mercer counties, Ohio, show republican gains.

Slight republican gains in Cincinnati over October election.

Kings county, N. Y., elects 8 democrats and 1 republican to congress.

Fifty Michigan districts give Blaine 7,561, Cleveland 5,000, Butler 2,080, Bogole, 5,657, Alger 8,164, Preston 916. Net democratic gain 521.

Forty six precincts in Louisville, Ky., give Cleveland a majority of 1,750.

Four wards in Cleveland, Ohio, give a republican gain of over 500.

Twenty-four cities in Michigan outside of Detroit give the fusion electoral ticket 368 majority, and Bagole 822 majority.

EMMET COUNTY.

Cross Village township gives fusion state ticket 123, Hampton 128, republican state ticket 22, Buckley 17.

Wednesday Dispatches.

A dispatch received at 2:30 Wednesday says New York will give Cleveland a handsome majority, sure.

Wednesday morning a telegram over the Western Union wire announced that New York had gone republican by 20,000. Democrats, however, did not believe it, and prepared to wait awhile before giving up all hope.

Wednesday afternoon, J. L. Newberry, of Petoskey, telephoned J. Milo Eaton that New York had gone for Cleveland by a sure and safe majority.

The following message sent by M. F. Quintanus of Petoskey, to Dr. Crouter Wednesday evening, served to raise democratic hopes to a high pitch, and unless later returns contradict it, Cleveland is certainly elected. "California, Nevada, Wisconsin, Indiana, New York, Delaware, Connecticut, and the solid south has gone for Cleveland. Michigan claimed by fusion."

These states give 232 of the electoral vote, without Michigan. Although Michigan gave Garfield a plurality of over 53,000, take from it the 34,000 votes cast for Weaver, and it leaves only 19,000 to overcome to carry the state for fusion. If Wisconsin can overcome a plurality of 29,000 without fusion, Michigan certainly ought to do as well with fusion.

Thursday Morning.

A message from C. J. Pailthorp to J. Milo Eaton this morning, says New York is so close that both parties claim it.

Indiana will require the official count to decide.

Vermont is doubtful.

Wisconsin is republican.

California republican; by a small majority.

West Virginia doubtful.

Michigan undoubtedly fusion, although the election of Alger is claimed.

C. S. Hampton had 250 majority in Emmet.

J. L. Newberry is elected Judge of probate by 120.

The whole fusion ticket in Emmet is elected except prosecuting attorney. M. W. George, republican, was elected by a small majority.

Kings, Queens, and New York counties gave Cleveland over 77,000 majority.

A message received at 2:30 says that the New York Tribune concedes Cleveland's election, and the National committee have telegraphed their congratulations to Gov. Cleveland.

Rhymes of Animals.

A correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette writes: I string the following lines together to tickle the ears of my two little boys, 4 and 6 years old. They tease their mamma over and over again, and they fetch the big illustrated dictionary to have her point out the animals with such strange names, and tell what she can about them. This fancy for rhyme or rhythm is, I suppose, is a characteristic of nearly all children and perhaps the painfulness of this will amuse a wider circle than my little household. The aim has been, after euphony, to have the most incongruous animals in juxtaposition as well as interesting. The Blood Heat.

Blood heat is set down on Fahrenheit thermometers at 98 degrees, but more careful investigation has shown that the temperature of a healthy person is between 102 and 103. One-half a degree either way indicates an abnormal condition, while 1 degree below would make a doctor shake his head ominously. When a fever sends the temperature up to 106 or 107 it depends entirely upon the amount of fuel on hand how long the fire will continue to burn. The tinder in the blood may be removed before the machinery is burned out and the fires smothered, or the vitality may be kept up until the tinder is all consumed and the fires go down of their own accord.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A MEMORY.

BY MANDA L. CROCKER.

Lowcup a tender, loving chord
Of memory's harp to-night,
And I see the sweet faces of words,
Mirados it seem delight,
Then coming as fly across the years,
To every soul larger hope,
The music flows, all dashed with tears,
From the circle of the stage.

The gold and purple sunset gleam
Falls across the meadow and
Nor comes to me, as in a dream;
With happy smile I press her hand.
I feel her breath upon my cheek,
I touch her shining, silken hair,
The loving words I cannot speak
Linge mutelsoldy, why need I care?

Was I dull? Ah, yes! I was dull, dear,
Dull as the dullest, I have a sun,
The chiefest joy of my life, I fear,
Is numbers and not of prose.
The music flows, as sound goes,
And throws away in happy tears
Over sickness and care.

Into the glowing of a setting light
Shines and only across the sea;
Over the sky, crossing over night
With the best wishes she gave—one and
Ah, I see, I see, I see, I see,
My heart with a lie has gone astray;
I only see through false tears
A vista, and I can, and I must obey.

MISS MARTHA'S MATCHMAKING.

BY AUGUSTA AVONDALE.

"I declare to goodness, Robert," Miss Martha said, raising her nose in a way peculiar to her, "I don't know what you will do unless you get married yourself."

Robert Ackerman looked at his sister in mild remonstrance as he said gently:

"Marry! At ten forget, Martha?"

Martha's face softened. Under the daisies, in the village cemetery, lay a little eyed girl who had been betrothed to her brother eighteen long years before, and died week before the wedding day.

"It is so long ago!" she said, apologetically.

"Yes," her brother said, sighing; "and I am too old to begin a new life. Thirty-eight in December, Martha."

"Well," said Miss Martha, tartly, "I am five years older, and I intend to marry John Sanderson in three months. Now, Robert—this very evening—there is Dorothy Gaines."

"Don't trouble yourself to pick out my wife," her brother said; "I have no intention of marrying, and certainly no desire to marry Dorothy Gaines."

He left the breakfast-table abruptly as he spoke and went to his study. Miss Martha rubbed her nose vigorously.

"Men are so unreasonable," she thought; "Robert must have some one to keep house for him and care. And Dorothy Gaines is the best housekeeper in Meadowville."

The idea of Dorothy Gaines presiding over the china closet and linen chest, that had been her idea's delight, aunt Cupid came to win away the old maid's attention, became more and more agreeable to Miss Martha as the morning wore away.

"I'll just give Dorothy a hint," she finally concluded. "Anybody can wist Robert around a finger if they half try."

It was a speech founded upon long experience, for Martha had ruled with a rod of iron her brother and managed his belongings for many long years. They were people of position in Meadowville. Their house was large, and well furnished in old-fashioned style. With good servants, well trained under her own severe discipline, ample means, and a brother who never found fault, Martha's housekeeping certainly had few flaws.

But when she consented to become the wife of the curate of Meadowville, the transfer of her power and privileges became a weighty burden. But one solution seemed possible; her brother must marry some steady, middle-aged spinster, who would keep on the prim neatness and the hundred fussy details of Miss Martha's domain. Miss Dorothy Gaines, a vinegar-faced, sharp-voiced woman of limited income, and unlimited energy and temper, proved to be smilingly willing to take Miss Martha's hints in good part.

Indeed, one word leading to another, they arranged trousseau and bridal tour before they separated. It had been a very satisfactory afternoon to Miss Martha, and she came home to tea in a very placid state of mind. Her brother, after lunch, had found himself unequal to his usual afternoon's reading, and strolled down a shady lane in the direction of the church. Was it his sister's suggestion that had so brought back the sweet face of his betrothed to his memory that he sought her grave, for of late years he had not been very often to the secluded corner where Alice Desmond slept, in the shade of a great oak tree.

He walked slowly, musingly, his eyes on the ground, till he was close to the grave. Then he looked up, and reeled back as if shot. Close to the grave, one little hand resting on the marble headstone, was a slender girl of seventeen or eighteen, dressed in pure white, with a wide straw hat that shaded Alice's great blue eyes, Alice's long, fair curls.

Robert Ackerman felt as if he had lost his reason. His voice was hoarse and strained as he said:

"Who are you, child?"

"I am Alice Desmond," said a low, sweet voice. "It is the name on the stone here. That Alice Desmond was my aunt, who died when I was a baby. Papa thinks I look like her."

The explanation was given with childlike frankness and simplicity, and gradually the suffocating throbs of Robert's heart became quiet, and his voice was natural and had its habitual gentleness as he said:

"I know your father well before he left Meadowville, and I knew your aunt. You may have heard of Robert Ackerman?"

"Who was to have married Aunt Alice?"

"Yes, dear child. You are like her—very much like her. Are you staying at Meadowville?"

"Yes. I have been ill. Not very, very ill; but"—and she gave a little gleeful laugh—"the doctor says I must go to the country, and not study so hard. So I am living with papa's cousin, Miss Dorothy Gaines."

"Ah, yes. Well, you must let me come to see you sometimes, for your father's sake."

"I shall be very glad to see you," said Alice, frankly, thinking this was the handsomest gentleman she had ever seen. He had large, kindly, dark eyes, and a few silver threads mingled with the raven of his hair, brushed back from a high, noble forehead; a mouth in which sternness was strangely mingled with sweetness, shaded by a dark mustache, and when he smiled Alice thought he was the best and noblest man in the world.

He chatted with her a little while, and then walked with her to the gate of her cousin's cottage, but would not then go in.

"I will come soon to see you," he promised in a low tone. "But he said nothing to Martha about this new engagement, feeling that a sacred chord of memory had been touched, and shrinking from commonplace remarks upon it. The next day Miss Martha went to the city to attend to her wedding purchases, and to visit a relative.

She left most explicit directions with her servants for Robert's comfort, and gave a second parting with a guilty sense of disloyalty.

Aunt Cupid was of sensitive refinement, a gentleman in the finest sense of the word; while his sister, without being vulgar, was what the Meadowvillians called a "stirring woman," full of life and bustle, of overflowing energy, and an incessant talker. Miss Martha had been in the city but a few days when a letter from Meadowville filled her heart with elation. It was from Dorothy Gaines, and ran thus:

"Your brother comes over nearly every day. I suppose he's a little lonesome while you are away, and he usually stays to tea. I've got a lodger in my house for him yet—a cousin of mine in the city. She's only a little girl, but she plays and sings, and your brother likes to hear her. He's very attentive—sends fruit and flowers and brings books. Lodger, brother, you and me, Martha, I'm no hand for books, and never was. Still, Philip's little girl seems to like to read, and it keeps her out of mischief. Girls are always in mischief."

Every week there came a long, exulting letter from Miss Gaines to her dear friend, Martha, until the time was drawing near for the elderly spinster's wedding. All her wedding garments were made, marked, and neatly packed, when she received a letter from her brother:

"Wait until Wednesday, and I will be your escort to Meadowville.

"ROBERT."

The court epistle had been written after a day of great moment to Robert Ackerman. He had gone quite early to the parsonage, after returning passed the cottage of Miss Gaines. Some times loitered a little at this house to exchange a few words with Dorothy in the garden flowers, but on that day he passed and caught his breath, as an excited voice rang out upon the—the voice of Dorothy Gaines—saying:

"You are an impudent little brat, and I'll send you home! How dare you set up to teach me how to treat my lodger?"

A low, sweet voice answered:

"You need not be so angry, Cousin Dorothy. I only said Robert Ackerman deserved a much more loyal fiancé."

"Fiddle, faddle, love! You sentimental schoolgirls talk such arrant nonsense. Robert Ackerman is a mooning old bachelor, who wants a wife to manage him and keep his house in order."

The sweet voice rang out more clearly: "Robert Ackerman is a noble, true gentleman, a man to love—a man to honor! And, if he marries, he wants a wife to love him—to make his life glad and happy."

"My good gracious!" gasped the astonished old maid.

"You think more this minute," continued Alice, "of his house, of his money, his carriage, and his table linen, than you do of him."

Well, suppose I do. Perhaps you would like to marry him yourself?"

"He would never think of such a thing; I am only an insignificant schoolgirl, to whom he is kind. But if I did marry him, it would be for love, and not for his money." Here the sweet but excited voice broke in a sob, and Alice fled from the battle-field.

Robert Ackerman walked home slowly. For many weeks, ever since the evening of his betrothal, he had felt as if his lost love, the hope of his youth, had been returned to him. Every night, after his day's work, he would go back the long-buried dream of happiness more vividly. But he had crushed down all hope.

Never would he link that bright, just-dawning life with his sad, memory-haunted one. But this morning's experience gave him new hope—a hope that made his breath come thick and fast, and his heart throb hopefully. He could not bear such suspense long, and in the afternoon he wandered to a spot in the woods where Alice had often brought her needlework, and where Miss Dorothy's keen eyes had never penetrated; and there the two would sit and chat by the hour, of books, travel, etc. Alice was there, but she was pale and shy—had evidently been weeping.

He thought he had never seen her look so beautiful before. She had on a white muslin dress, looped up with blue ribbon; her long golden curls were simply tied back with a blue ribbon, while the fluffy curls rested on her pure white brow. She was evidently buried in deep thought, for she did not perceive him until he was close beside her. She rose like a startled fawn, and would have fled, but, gently taking her little trembling hand in his strong ones, he said:

"Alice, my darling, I love you; do not run away from me. I want you for my own little wife. Can you love me a little?"

"But," faltered Alice, "I thought I misunderstood you were to marry Cousin Dorothy?"

"You are mistaken, dearest I do not care for Miss Gaines, nor have I ever asked her to be my wife. There is but one little woman in the world that I shall ever ask to be my wife," he said, tenderly.

"I did not think you could care for me, I am only an insignificant schoolgirl," said Alice.

"Look in my eyes, my love, my darling, and see whether I care for you or not?" he said.

She raised her eyes shyly to his face, but the passionate love she saw there dazzled her, and she dropped them in sweet confusion. Placing his arm tenderly around her he drew her gently to his bosom, and pressed passionate kisses on her sweet, quivering lips and burning cheeks. After a few moments Alice lifted her head from on the resistant and drew her down beside him, and gazing dotefondly into the sweet, blue eyes raised to his, said: "I have not said yet whether you would be my wife or not?"

"I cannot imagine any greater happiness than to be your wife," said Alice, emphatically.

Miss Martha Ackerman was already to return home when her brother presented himself in the drawing-room of the house where she was staying. He was so much taller than anything she had arrayed herself for traveling with such evident disgust that it awoke her indignant surprise.

"What are you looking at me in that way for?" she asked sharply. "This dress is good enough to spoil with dust. Come to look at you, you are shabby enough to spoil myself yourself. Why, your coat is new—new gloves, too!"

"I wish you to dress yourself handsomely, Martha," her brother said quietly, "to attend my wedding!"

"You can't be married till we get to Meadowville. Dorothy surely never came home yet!"

"I told you some time ago, Martha, that I had no intention of marrying Miss Gaines."

"Then who are you going to marry?"

"Alice Desmond."

Miss Martha simply stared, with a creeping horror that her brother was going mad.

"She is Philip Desmond's daughter, my Alice's niece."

"What are you talking about? Philip Desmond hasn't been married, but—

"Twenty years ago. Alice is eighteen, just the age of my dead love."

Miss Martha had a soft place in her heart, hard as she seemed, for she had loved her brother's betrothed in that long ago when there were all young. Her voice was very gentle as she asked, "Are you sure she loves you, Robert? She is very young."

"But she loves me, Martha; do not fear for my happiness, sister."

And Miss Martha selected the richest costume in her trousseau to attend the wedding, and stopped on the way to the carriage to buy a gift for her little sister-in-law that proved her good will, as well as her generosity.

It was not until the party returned to Meadowville that Miss Gaines received her own a castle in the air also had until upon Miss Martha's matchmaking.

The New Style.

"Jennie, I ask you again—Will you marry me? Yes or no?"

"Alfred, dearest, this is so sudden." When, winding a snow white arm about his neck, the young girl dropped her blushing cheek upon his shoulder and murmured: "Now you give me just one moment to think."

"No, my comfy little doll," he impetuously replied; "I ran no longer endure suspense. You answer must come now."

"Just a moment," she pleaded, in silly accents, as her lily hand caressed his arm and wandered softly, with the electric touch of love, toward his big pocket.

"Not a moment," he sternly replied. "Will you be my wife?"

Swiftly as a break in oil her hand jerked the deadly, self-cocking ball-dog pistol from his pocket, and, spanning its muzzle against his ear, the young maid: "No, you ice-cream wreck; emphatically no! And if you don't get out of sight in two seconds I'll make a mashed potato of you." Then, as his heels glanced around the corner of the next block, she murmured: "I his new style of courtship, and with my hair down."—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

The Ruins of Fort Sumter.

Fort Sumter is now a very ungainly, cast place compared to what it once was. It has been razed to one story, and looks quite dilapidated. It has only a few guns, not more than half a dozen, and the doubtful state of the carcasses of the best guns are rotten and unfit for even ten minutes of service. The Government pays $200 per month to a man and his assistants to keep the lights on this fort and a very little channel between the fort and Sullivan Island stained filled up, and at low water the sand is visible almost across.

Every man's ability may be strengthened or increased by culture.

DO THE EYES GET TIRED?

Some Popular Errors Concerning Fatigue of the Optic Organs.

Persons speak of their eyes being fatigued, meaning thereby that the rising portion of the brain is fatigued, or that they are tired. They do not say that their brains are tired, rains seldom becomes tired. The organs of the eye, which is a part of the brains, and an offshoot from it, only eye is tired. The fatigue is in no inner and outer membrane of the eye and in the muscles of accommodation. The eyeball resting in a cul of fat, has attached to it six muscles for turning it in any desired direction, and the muscles of accommodation are the nearest the nose and one at the outer edge of the eye should, in every normal eye, be balanced. They are used in converging the eye on the object to be viewed, and the inner muscles are used the more when the object is near. The muscle of accommodation is the one which surrounds the lens of the eye. When it is wanted to gaze at an object near at hand this muscle relaxes and allows the lens to the lens, increasing its refractive power at the same time that the muscles of the inner edge of the eye contract and direct the eye to the proper angle. It is in these muscles that the fatigue is felt, and the trouble is not in the eyes or in gazing at objects at a distance. The chief source of fatigue is the lack of balance between the inner and outer muscles of accommodation.

It may be set down that there is something wrong when the eyes become fatigued. The defective sight gives out sooner, is really safe from more strains. Nature's intimation of strain is the redness of the rim of the eyelid, betokening a congested state of the inner surface, accompanied with some pain. When it is shown that the eye is not equal to the work required of it, the proper remedy is not rest, for that is fatal to the strength, but the use of glasses of sufficient power to render unnecessary so much effort in accommodating the eye to its vision. It is not good sense to waste time in resting the eyes, and the practice does not strengthen them.

Eyes begin to ages at about the fortieth or twelfth year of life, when they have reached their full development. At the age of forty-five or fifty years the lens is crease to thicken, which is a process is removed and then produces a gradual slight, begins. When a child is compelled to use or to repress the use of eyes there is little reason to hope that it will outgrow their use, but a person will use these glasses as a basis, adding other glasses as he reaches the age when old sight begins, or using the same glasses. A man has been known where a child had outgrown the glasses, but in the meantime he had grown from a small and puny child into a large and well-developed man.

Second sight, or the apparent recovery of strength of vision, which is sometimes seen in persons of advanced age, is a change, an elongation of the shape of the eyeball, by which the person is made nearsighted, accompanied by change in the lenses caused by appearance of cataract.—Lecture by Dr. H. W. Beach.

Proof of Death.

It most people are afraid of anything, it is of being buried alive. That cases do happen where it is very difficult even for the experienced physician to determine whether a person is really or not apparently dead, without his having recourse to means which, while they do no harm to the supposed corpse, may place life, if it really still existed, in jeopardy, may be judged from the fact that the French Academy some ten or fifteen years ago, offered a prize of 40,000 francs for the discovery of some means by which even the inexperienced wife or mother could determine whether in a given case death had occurred or not, the physician obtained the prize. He had discovered the following well-known phenomenon. If the hand of the suspected person is held toward the ceiling, or other artificial light, with the fingers stretched, and one touching the other, and one looks through the spaces between the fingers toward the light, there appears a scarlet red color where the fingers touch each other, due to the still circulating fluid blood, as it shows itself through the transparent, not yet congested tissues, but when life is extinct, this phenomenon at once ceases. The most extensive and thorough trials established the truth of this observation, and the prize was awarded to its discoverer.

Electric Lights in Coal Mines.

The illumination of a coal mine by electricity illustrates the advantages of the electric light over other well as efficiency. It is declared that the brilliancy of the electric light reveals any tendency to breaks in the supports or walls of mines, so that a cave-in will not take the miners unawares. And it also enables the miners to do more work in less time, and therefore lessens the advantage of the light of day. But its security as against fire-damp is its great recommendation. This is the special danger of miners.—Philadelphia Call.

POSTOFFICE CURIOSITIES.

Funny Names for Offices—"Our Canine" Hamlets.

This great country has now over 50,000 postoffices for its 50,000,000 people, or about one for each 1,000 persons. There are some curious facts connected with the administration of so large an institution as this. The employees of the department number over a hundred thousand, and the revenue the sum required to run so large an establishment is something enormous. The salaries of postmasters alone amount to nearly $10,000,000, and the sum paid for transportation of mails $55,000,000. The number of postoffices is increasing steadily at the rate of over 2,000 a year. The task of the fellow who fixes names for all these is a pretty serious one. Of course the people of the section where the offices are to be located are allowed to fix a name so far as possible, but in many cases they select a name already given to some office in the State, and of course it cannot be used. Then they are permitted to make some other selection, and so on alphabetically, until a name is finally hit on, however, that the postoffice officials are compelled to finally select, is that in little hamlet of a few houses who have the selecting of the name, by having frequently some name already in use in the State, jump at some ridiculous name altogether unlessed of before, or selected by some peculiar surroundings. Some of the odd names are as follows: Bull Thump, Daylook, Bird At, Calico, Rocks, Windfall, Bura Axis, Seven Stars, Leap Year, Haphazard, Bog, Odd, Bunkside, Difficult, Baby Mine, Bean Blossom, Yankee, Fay Up, Hard Money, Happy Home, Wide Awake, Hightoby, Noisy, Moon, Pad Ind., Coatsville, Blowhorn, Lulbulk, Choulland, Butterfly, Zib, Quidnunc, Scotch, Scotch, Ty Ky, Picker, Bush, Somerset, Bumble Bee, Zulu, Soppchoppy, Zero, Jamboree, Marrowbone, Skedaway, Negro Foot, Jump, Yon Bet, Greenhorn, Tenderfoot, Sunshine, Bone, Bloody, Kansas, Oil Trough, Nine Times, Blowout, Gumpewder, Fairgrounds, Last Chance, Clear Grit, Greasy, Tailaffle, Mary Esther, Why Not, Sumper, Velo, Round Bottom, Ragtown, Gallop, Hayfork, Ten Mile, Land of Promise, Squak, Smallpox, Moses Tail, Rocket, Port Wine, Side View, Good Luck, Big Hill, Worms, Dry Weed, Fair Play, Coin, Coal, Fire, Sodom, Hog Eye, Eye, Bumble Bee, Hard Scrug, Black Bear, Pinnforee, Bitterness, Hungry Hollow, Wormwood The South and the West have the most grotesque names for their postoffices, although many may be found in New England and the Middle States. In Texas is also a place called Bug Tussle, and in Georgia is a place called Ty Ty. In Massachusetts, on some maps, one may find a place called Ty Ty. QUARTZ JEWELRY.

An Industry Confined to the State of California.

The making of quartz jewelry is peculiarly a California industry. Its manufacture was begun in the early days following the gold discovery. Though quartz lit for the art of the jeweler is found all over California, the best is that coming from the mines of the Grass valley. It is not often the miner comes across rock which would find a sale among the jewelers. The gold has to be evenly distributed and uotlumpy, so that it has passed through the necessary stages to prepare it for sending the spots and seams are well scattered through the rock. The quartz which a miner thus procures is sent down either to a bank or an assay office, and from there the jewelr receives notice that a consignment is ready for auction. The bids then depend entirely upon the state of the stock held by the diiferent bidders, and should a jeweler happen to be in want of quartz, the amount paid would be double that which he would pay on any other occasion.

As a rule the jeweler pays much higher for the rough quartz than would one who desired to purchase the gold to melt. The quartz as taken by the jeweler is brought in lumps weighing from one to ten pounds, and in this condition it is handed over to a mechanic for the purpose of being cut into sizes. The process is an easy one and nearly similar to that followed by the marble-cutters. The saw by which this operation is performed is circular and made of sheet tin and charged with water and emery. The quartz is held up to it, and in its revolutions it divides the quartz. The slabs in which the quartz is cut do not generally exceed one-eighth of an inch in thickness. The preliminary work is then over. It is not till the jewely is made, the fittings, as it were, that these slabs are again cut, then fitted into the gold and cemented. It is then ground off level with the gold and finally polished until it assumes that brightness as when exposed for sale.

The coloring of quartz is extremely rich and varied, being found in the same section of country in white and black and pink and blue. Hitherto there has been no preference expressed by the lover for the color of the quartz in the trinket. Perhaps this has been obviated by the jeweler, who, in the manufacture of even the smallest article, never fails to give as varied an assortment of quartz as is possible. The method of the valuation of quartz rock is peculiar. It is first weighed as any other material, and then under water, as rock weighs next to nothing when under water surface. The amount of gold imbedded in the rock can by this process be determined.

There have not been men wanting who have attempted to make artificial quartz to be used in the manufacture of large goods, in the way of cord tieles and similar articles, but decided failure has followed each and every attempt. Whether quartz jewelry will ever become fashionable is a question which the business men of this city give no long thought. They declare their inability to see quartz fantastically, or to sufficiently fine it down so as to cut it into delicate flowers and leaves. There is an air of substantility about the trinkets made for ladies, which, though handsome, have somewhat of a clumsy look. And the jeweler has to contend against a difficulty which lies on the opposite side. Quartz cannot be bent in sufficiently large pieces to use in the manufacture of objects of use and ornament.

Some years ago a jewel-casket was made in this city for the wife of a certain rich judge, which in itself was a marvel of beauty and elegance, it being of solid gold and quartz, having four panels, each five inches in length and three in width. The cost incurred in this work was enormous and the amount of labor incredible. Some slight estimate of the trouble may be formed when the maker of the casket had to employ a man who traveled for two entire months through the mines in search for quartz of sufficient size to execute the order.

After diligent inquiry among several workers it was estimated that not over $100,000 worth of quartz jewelry is disposed of in this city during a year and but $25,000 worth is bought for people to wear in San Francisco.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Handsome English Girls.

There are more handsome women in Brighton than anywhere else in the world, says an English journal. They are so common that gradually the standard of taste in the mind rises, and good-looking women who would be admired in other places pass by without notice. Where all the flowers are roses you do not see a rose. They are all plump,—not to say fat, which would be rude,—very plump, and have the glow of youth and bloom upon the cheeks. They do not suffer from "pernicious anemia," that evil bloodlessness that London physicians are not unfrequently called upon to cure, when the cheeks are white as paper, and have to be rosied by minute doses of arsenic. They extract arsenic from the air. The way they step and the carriage of the form show how full they are of life and spirits. Sarah Bernhardt will not come to Brighton if she can help it less she should lose the high art singularity and slipperyness of shape which suits her role. Dresses seem always to fit well, because people somehow seem to expand them.

It is pleasant to see the girls walk, because the limbs do not drag, the feet are lifted gaily and with ease. Horse exercise adds a deeper glow to the face; they ride upon the downs first, out of pure cussing, for the air is certain to impart a freshness to the features, like dew on a flower, and then return and walk their horses to and fro on the king's road, certain of admiration. However often these tricks are played they are always successful. These philanthropic folks who want to reform woman's dress and call upon the world to observe how the present style contracts the chests and forces the organs of the body out of place (what a queer expression it seems, "organs?"), have not a chance in Brighton.

Girls lace tight and "go in" for the tip of fashion, yet they bloom and flourish as green bay trees, and do not mind their skirts any obstacle in walking or tennis. The horse-riding that goes in a thing to be chronicled; they are always on horseback, and you may depend upon it that it is better for them than all the gymnastic exercises ever invented. The liability to strain, and even internal injury, which is incurred in gymnastic exercises ought to induce sensible people to be extremely careful how they permit their daughters to sacrifice themselves on this scientific altar. Buy them horses to ride if you want them to enjoy good health and sound constitutions. Nothing like horses for women. Send the professors to Muskim and put his girl's on his stilts.

Whether Brighton grows handsome girls or whether they flock there by instinct, or become lovely by staying there, is an inquiry too difficult to pursue. There is no way, one at least in the marble-cutters. The saw by which this operation is performed is circular and made of sheet tin and charged with water and emery. The quartz is held up to it, and in its revolutions it divides the quartz. The slabs in which the quartz is cut do not generally exceed one-eighth of an inch in thickness. The preliminary work is then over. It is not till the jewely is made, the fittings, as it were, that these slabs are again cut, then fitted into the gold and cemented. "The Voodoo Doctor."

With the advance of education among the colored people, the business of the voodoo doctors became less lucrative. They find enough dupes, however, to make their nefarious practice yield them a pretty good living. The voodoo doctor is generally an old white haired darky, who walks with a crooked cane and carries something resembling an old army haversack slung across his shoulders. As he walks along he occasionally stops, looks upward, waves his stick in a peculiar way and seems to hold mysterious converse with the invisible spirits of the air, if such there be. All these antics have their effect upon the superstitious negro, especially those of the female sex, who are the largest patrons of the voodoo doctor. In his bag or haversack he carries a queer assortment, the tentails of dead men, roots and herbs, curious pieces of iron, bits of wood, etc., with which he pretends to make marvelous cures.

It was during slave time the voodoo doctor flourished. He did a thriving business among runaway negroes, who were promised immunity from punishment in case of recapture for a small sum.

One of the voodoo doctor's methods of operating is to secure a black chicken and two pieces of silver from a dupe. He then procures a skillet, which he half fills with water, placing the pieces of silver in the skillet opposite each other. He then requests his dupe to mentally name one of the pieces after the enemy he has no desires to circumvent. When the water begins to boil he drops an occasional feather from the black chicken into the skillet, meanwhile something which is unintelligible. As soon as the water boils the pieces of money begin to rise and fall, as they naturally would do, and by a skillful manipulation of the skillet he brings one of the pieces on top of the other—the one beneath always being the one named after the enemy of his dupe. For this the dupe is expected to pay according to his means—from $1 up to $10.

Another voodoo trick is to pretend to sew a $1 or $5 bill in the upper hand of the pants to insure good luck, but actually secreting the money and sewing a piece of folded paper in the pants instead.

Still another voodoo trick is to bury a small image wrapped in red flannel in the yard to dig it up. When the package is found it is said by the voodoo doctor to be a good omen, for which he charges the dupe a handsome fee.

An old voodoo doctor in West Washington recently acquired quite a reputation by his alleged cure of a colored girl afflicted with rheumatism, his recipe being a decoction of sassafras, red pepper, fine and coarse salt, and soap. For a small vial of this he charged $1.50 and for a personal visit $5.

Too more mysterious the voodoo doctor is, the more patients he obtains. They are seldom arrested, as they are secrecy on their patrons, who generally observe their requests. If a patient survives the treatment, the cure is attributed to the voodooist, and if he dies his friends are ashamed to confess that they have been victimized.—Washington Post.

THE CATS OF BROADWAY.

Pet Animals in the Shops Which Are Polite to Customers and Keep the Mice Away.

"No shop is complete nowadays without a cat," said a Broadway policeman. "My beat along the upper part of Broadway takes me right through the shopping district, and when I go home at night I have to walk down Sixth avenue, so that I have a pretty fair opportunity to watch the cats. The first case that ever came to my notice was about two years ago, when I went into a furnishing-goods store on Broadway to buy a collar. Well, sir, I went in and asked the man for some collars, and he dumped a lot on the show-case. A big Maltese cat which had been lying on the door-mat trotted back to where I stood, jumped on the counter and then on the show-case, and walked deliberately to where the collars lay. She was a beautiful cat, with big eyes and a soft, gray coat. She sat down quietly, looked in my face, and watched me while I selected the collars. Every few minutes she would put out her paw and gently touch whatever collar I seemed to have in my hand. Finally, when I had chosen one, and it had been wrapped up for me, she gave the bundle a gentle pat with her paw, then bounced back on the floor again, and went back to her place on the door-mat. The shopkeeper told me that every customer who came in received the same treatment from the cat, and when a man was buying a big bill of goods the Maltese would follow him around from one case to another, and always accompanied him to the door when he left, which was a bit of politeness that the cat never showed in a small buyer.

"Every drug-store on Broadway has its pet cat, and they are all of them fine, well-fed, and good-natured animals. There is one that lies in the front window among a lot of sponges in the winter time. When I first saw that cat I thought it was stuffed. I passed in there or four times every afternoon for a week, but never thought it was alive. It lay in one position with its head curled down on its paws, and never changed its position during the afternoon. I stood watching it once for a long time through the window, and the clerk in the store, just to show me it was alive, poked it up. The cat got up lazily, stretched itself, rubbed its nose against the clerk's hand, and then went to sleep again.

"They say they are very careful about drug-stores, as they keep the mice away from the horse and sweet things. There is a big black cat in a drug-store corner of Thirtieth street, which knows as much as any dog I ever saw. It is a beauty, too. According to my mind, it is the handsomest cat in New York. It is as black as the sou of spades and as shiny as ebony. It is a young cat, but it has already learned to recognize the regular customers of the place. It has a comfortable corner in the doorway, where it sleeps in the daytime, and at night it lounges around the soda fountain. There is not a mouse in the place. The cat will move about on the shelves among delicate bottles and fine glassware, but it has never broken a thing. If you go into the shop more than once it will recognize you, and after that will always come forward to meet you. The boys sometimes have got the habit of stopping and rubbing its head when they go in the shop, and the result is it trots out naturally to meet its friends. That cat is a regular master of ceremonies.

"On the corner above there is a big yellow cat which is growing old and lazy. It has a great favorite with lady customers, and when they come in to give an order and sit down in a chair the cat always comes along, jumps up in their laps, and purrs affectionately. There is hardly a shop along Broadway that has not a pet cat, and everyone of the shopkeepers can tell you fine stories about what his cat can do. I know for a fact that there are some very clever cats in these shops. They are better than dogs, because they keep the rats and mice away, and do not interfere with the customers. No danger of their getting lost, and it costs little or nothing to keep them. I know a cat in a butcher shop on Sixth avenue, near Thirty-third street, which has laid out for itself a place near the front door. The butcher sprinkles his floor with sawdust three times a day, and every time he does it the cat hops up on the window-sill and watches the operation closely. When it is finished and the floor is thoroughly covered the cat hops down and selects a spot directly in the middle of the wide doorway and begins slowly to clear a spot there. It begins by moving its paw around in a small circle, and finally brushes the sawdust away until a clear spot is left. This spot is about two feet in diameter, and always perfectly round. The carpenter couldn't make a more accurate circle. It is invariably in the middle of the doorway, and when the cat has every bit of sawdust off this particular spot it lies down with its nose toward the sidewalk, and dozes. If a man or woman comes in and kicks the sawdust into the cleared circle the cat carefully brushes it out again.

"These sin't very exciting stories, but they are truthful. I might tell you about a cat which went up to the seventh story of a burning building and carried a sick man down the waterpipe safely to the street, or give you many other fairy tales, but you wouldn't believe them, and so what would be the use? I had rather tell a truthful story and have it believed than a large tale that no one credits."—N. Y. Sun.

FINE FEATHERS.

How Ostrich Plumes and Tips Are Imitated.

"Take the year right through," said a feather dealer to a reporter yesterday afternoon, "and you'll find by observation that San Francisco ladies wear feathers on their hats to a greater extent than they are worn in any other city of this size in the world."

"How's that?" asked the reporter.

"Its the climate, I suppose—the cool even temperature of this peninsula, which permits sealskins and Winter fashioned hats to be worn during the greater part of the year."

"But the dealers in fancy feathers don't complain on this account?"

"Not they. It's a very good business here, except during two or three months of the year, when people are well supplied or have come into the country with their flower and ribbon-trimmed straw hats. A good deal of my trade is with ladies who have old feathers to dye or curl or to cut up into tips."

"What is a tip?"

"A tip is one of those short, bobbing feathers so stylish just now. Last year the fashionable craze was over wild birds' wings and heads for hats and turbans, but this year it's tips."

"Are they mostly cut from ostrich feathers?"

"Well, that is the supposition; but, bless you, we don't sell more than half the number of real ostrich tips that we do of imitations. It's a shame to cut up a nice, long ostrich plume into tips, and the very short ostrich feathers are rarely of good texture and fiber—that is, the African kind are not. Many of the East India importations of this sort are very good, however, but they come very high. So all kinds of feathers are fixed up in imitation of those of the ostrich. There's the rhea, or American ostrich, the adjutant, peacock, pheasant, eagle and others. The kind used here to a great extent, especially in imitating ostrich tips, is the South American vulture. I will show you some of these imitations and you will see how they may be distinguished from the real article."

Comparisons were then made between different varieties of feathers, and the difference between the genuine and the counterfeit pointed out. It was shown how an "ostrich" plume of great length might be made by piecing the soft, short feathers of the vulture on a framework of wholesome, stiff cloth or other material, the only way to detect the imposition on public credulity without direct comparison being by a glance at the inside of the feather, which will disclose the framework. The feathers of cocks are also placed together in this manner, and when curled and colored make a handsome plume, though more easily distinguished from the ostrich feathers by the thin and wiry nature of the fibre.

"What is the difference in price between imitation and real plumes and tips?" was asked.

"Real ostrich feathers run from $2.50 up to $20 each. I will make you all the imitations you want at 10 cents up to $4 or $5 apiece."

"Are the long plumes worn in a great extent?"

"Oh, yes; they always will be, too, as there is nothing handsomer on a hat than a finely-colored plume."

"Are all these feathers dyed before being worn?"

"Nearly all. Only once in a great while do we get a feather right off the ostrich, which does not require coloring. You see, uniform color is always desired by ladies, and this is a rare thing in freshly-plucked ostrich feathers. They are generally like this," said the feather man, showing some long white and brown feathers, the colors of which were mixed, like pepper and salt, over the downy plume. "Here is a rarity," and he uncovered a lovely brown feather, which would have made a fashionable young lady wild with envy if she had seen it on a rival belle's hat. "Then they come in greys and sometimes in snow-whites, but the latter are rare," and the dealer

The various methods of dyeing feathers were explained. They are not materially different from the modes of coloring straw or dress goods. A feather may be colored a hundred different shades, beginning with a light one, and when well, if properly cared for.

"Where do the San Francisco feather dealers get their supplies or the ostrich articles?" the reporter inquired.

"Chiefly from New York. We used to import them, but for some reason or other we find that we can get the same from New York for half the price we would have to pay 25 francs for in Paris. Besides, there is an enormous customs duty to be paid."

"Do you get many feathers from Australia?"

"No; only a few, but they are of good quality."

"How do the feathers of the ostriches hatched in this country compare with those of imported stock?"

"Very favorable, those that I have seen. There is no reason why the ostrich should not thrive in our southern counties. I am well acquainted with the ostrich-growing industry, having once owned an ostrich farm near California. One thing I have noticed about ostrich-growing in this country, which I don't think is the failure to secure good stock to start with. The man who selects from the best birds, and those varieties having the finest plumage, will be the man who makes the most money out of the business. In ostrich-raising, as in everything else, a person must start right in order to succeed."

"What are the going colors in feathers just now?"

"Gold-brown and bright and dark garnet."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Morning-Glory Girls.

In the pages of a novel the girl who has a morning call always comes tripping into the parlor, dressed in a soft, fleecy gown of white, or a rose-colored cassimere with a girdle of bright ribbons, or a neat house dress of some shimmering gray fabric. She puts away her soft brown hair from her untroubled face, and her eyes have the rested brightness of immortal youth, and much more of the same sort ad infinitum. This is in a book. Now take the young lady of real life. She has breakfasted and is amusing herself with a book when a caller is announced. If it is a young gentleman, and she does not expect him, she sends word that she will be "down immediately." Then she tears a bandage from her queenly brow, which looks as if it had been cemented together, and picks out the handcliffs bangs. Then hurried toilet ablutions, a white Mother Hubbard with a great sash tied around her knee, takes the place of the waist and skirt which were "good enough for home." The old slip-shod slippers are replaced by pink hose and opera ties. There is a hasty skirmish with the powder puff, a christening dash of cologne, and with an unfolded mouchoir in her hand the young lady descends to the parlor and finds her younger brother on intimate terms with the caller, who is no other than her escort of the previous evening when she was arrayed in purple and fine lace. He does not realize that she is en masquerade just now as much as she was then; that he is the hero of a scene in real life, and that if he had met her in the hall as she appears in the bosom of her family he would probably have mistaken her for her own maid. He could scarcely, with this vision before him, be brought to understand that her young ladyhood is so completely a matter of personal adornment.

It would be almost a safe thing to assert that out of fifteen young ladies of leisure only five could be seen at a morning call without the required wait of half an hour. In many families where the daughter is a social belle there is no much preliminary hurrying and scurrying to get her into presentable shape for an unexpected call as if it were an emergency of fire. And this is due to any poverty of wearing apparel. The younger lady can have anything she desires to wear—lace, indeed, quantities of beautiful clothing—but what is the use of making an elaborate toilet if there isn't anybody to see it? in this case father and mother sisters and brothers are all nobodies.

A wait of one hour and a skirt of another, both shabby and soiled, a dim lighted fichu, hair en papillotes, last night's powder still visible in streaks, and a general yaw-ay-yaw-aw yaw-aw-yaw of wonderment. What is a description of—a farmer's scarecrow? No! A modern belle, who begins life at the wrong end of the day.

A fashionable mother who brought up alone and unaided a family of daughters, all of whom fill honorest places in society, never allowed her girls to appear at the breakfast table in a social undress. They must be fresh, clean and with a finish of collar and coiffure, or back they went to their rooms. There was no running away when the door bell of that house rung. The young ladies were always ready to be seen in their nicely laundried ruffled gingham and breakfast suits, and there was no appalling contrast between their evening and morning toilet. Each was suited to themselves and the occasion on which it was worn. In the rose-garden of girls she who blooms the longest begins the day as a morning-glory.

Clara Belle at Newport.

One of the Knickerbocker girls whom I met and liked is to be in bride in October. She is a philosophic little thing. I noticed that her to-be husband was being sweet, gently, not mum in less sweet, let down from the heights of shadowy sentiment to the solidities of human sensuality. Do you follow me? Let me illustrate my meaning. She was standing with the infatuated fellow; and on seating her at my side, he whispered rapturously: "I really think you have wings on your heels, you dancer so lightly." "Not a wing," she replied, "the fact is that I had No. 2 shoes on No. 3 feet, and I felt as though I were running around on my ankles. But just now my pet corn stings through the numbness." "Ah!" sighed the persistently romantic chap, "then the wings extended invisibly from your stockings, don't they?" "Well, it's safe to bet," the heavenly seraph responded, "that if any wings are attached to me they are somewhere outside of my corset, for there isn't room for a half a breath inside."

Dr. Pratt, of London, states in a lecture that in 1,000 married men between the age of 25 and 30 there are 6 deaths; in the same number of bachelors there are 10 deaths; the widowers numbers 22.

SOUTHERN.

A press dispatch from New Iberia, La., gives the following particulars of a bloody affray at a Republican meeting a day or two before the election. "Judge Fellows and eight or nine others left here for Franklin to hold a political meeting in the interest of Kellogg. After the second had assembled, a disturbance was created by persons hallooing "Hurrah for Cox." Joseph Duffany rushed to the scene of the trouble and was fired at, the ball passing through his hat, he returned the fire. At this moment there was a general row, and Capt. Bell, a prominent sugar planter and a Democrat, and Joseph Guillaum, a leading Democrat, and Oliver Hunter (colored), a Kellogg supporter, from New Iberia, were killed outright. The wounded, as far as known, are, Jules Monnier, Republican candidate for Sheriff; Sam Hodge, Republican candidate for Sheriff, also colored in the scuffle. About a dozen others were slightly wounded. Six negroes were killed so far as known. The people here are very excited and are under guard until the Sheriff arrives in accordance. A number were indiscriminately killed in New Iberia, and in a few minutes after he arrived the town was in the utmost confusion. Affairs look very cloudy for a peaceful election."

DEMOCRACY

TRIUMPHANT

For President,

GROVER

CLEVELAND

Of New York.

For Vice President,

Thomas A. Hendricks

Of Indiana.

Twenty States Demand a Change, and Give a Majority of 37 in the Electoral College.

One Hundred Thousand Plurality of the Popular Vote for Cleveland.

Michigan Partially Redeemed by the Election of a Fusion Legislature.

Democratic Gains Everywhere.

At time of going to press last week, the dispatches were so conflicting that we were not absolutely certain of a democratic victory on the national ticket, although the preponderence of returns were in that direction. Later returns, however, give New York to Cleveland, ranking him twenty states with a plurality of nearly one hundred thousand of the popular vote, and eighteen votes to spare in the electoral college.

This is the nation's vindication of the man whose moral character the republican managers tried to smirch with vile slanders. This is the nation's seal of disapproval of the methods employed by party managers and others in official position to turn the machinery of government to the one idea of perpetuating the republican party and enriching its leaders.

Congress is democratic by a good working majority.

Michigan has partially redeemed herself by the election of a fusion legislature, although the executive and state officers are still republican by a small majority.

Michigan's delegation in congress remains the same politically, though the conditions are reversed in four districts—the second and fourth from fusion to republican, and the eighth and tenth from republican to fusion.

Catcheon is elected to congress, but by a majority much reduced from that received two years ago.

Frincis is elected to the state senate.

Emmet district sends Charles S. Hampton to the legislature by a handsome majority.

Charlevoix county elects the entire republican ticket, except treasurer, but by largely reduced majorities.

For the good work done we rejoice.

ADDITIONAL RETURNS.

The Vote for Governor.

Below we give a comparative table of the vote for governor, in Charlevoix county, in 1882 and 1884, by townships:

TOWNSHIPS.	1882.		1884.
	Republic.	Greenback.	Republic.	Alger.
Bear Lake	17	36	32	7
Boyne Valley	21	21	35	6

Wilson	21	33	30	1
Totals	550	678	752	77
Plurality		128	675	145

Michigan in Congress.

Michigan's delegation in congress will stand 10 fusion and six republican, as follows:

Fusion—Wm. C. Maybury, 1st district; C. C. Comstock, 3d; E. B. Winans, 6th; F. C. Clarke, 7th; T. E. Tarsney, 9th; S. G. Fisher, 10th.

Republican—E. P. Allen, 2d district; Amos Cotbonell, 4th; J. C. Burrows, 5th; R. M. Cutcheon, 8th; S. C. Moffatt, 10th.

Ninth District.

Byron M. Cutcheon is elected to congress from this district, but by a majority of less than half that received two years ago. The Tuesday table shows the majorities in the several counties in the district:

	Fellows.	Cutcheon.
Antrim	.....	359
Charlevoix	.....	675
Kalkaska	.....	76
Lake	.....	187
Manistee	259	36

Newaygo	296	.....
Oceana	50	.....
Wexford	146	.....
Totals	1,982	2,315
Majority	.....	1,273

Representative in Legislature.

We have not been able to get the official returns from Cheboygan, and C. S. Hampton's majority there cannot be given instead of the total vote. In the figures below, Charlevoix and Emmet are official:

	Hampton.	Sheckler.
Charlevoix	99	1,041
Cheboygan	187	.....
Emmet	837	737
Total	2,064	1,778
Hampton's majority	286

Antrim County.

The entire republican ticket is elected here except prosecuting attorney, the fusion candidate running ahead by a small majority. The following is the ticket elected: Judge of probate, Jas. J. McLaughlin; sheriff, H. W. Stewart; clerk and register, J. A. Harrington; treasurer, A. S. Abbott; prosecuting attorney, H. B. Hudson; circuit court commissioner, C. S. Gulle; surveyor, F. L. Church; coroners, Geo. M. Glew, Wm. Thompson.

Cheboygan County.

The fusion electoral ticket has a majority of 127, Bogue 181, Fisher for congress 80. The republican county ticket, except supervisor, is elected by very large majorities, as follows: Judge of probate, E. Z. Perkins, 396; sheriff, Luke Cross, 100; clerk, E. C. Hand, 229; treasurer, G. W. Bell, 226; register of deeds, H. W. McArthur, 234; prosecuting attorney, G. E. Pond, 331; surveyor, —, Thompson, diamond, 186.

Benton township gives Buckley 27 majority.

Emmet County.

This county gave the fusion electoral ticket 837 votes, Hinsdale 737 votes, Fisher for Congress 175 plurality, Hampton for representative 99 majority. The county ticket elected is as follows: Judge of probate, J. L. Newberry, fusion, 66 plurality; sheriff, Chas. Pratt, fusion, 38 plurality; clerk, A. L. Hathaway, fusion, 520 plurality; treasurer, A. L. Morrow, republican, 136 plurality; register, Thomas Quinlan, fusion, 109 plurality; prosecuting attorney, M. W. George, republican, 2 majority; circuit court commissioner, C. C. Barnum, republican, 30 majority; surveyor, J. Roker, fusion, 40 plurality.

Serious Charges Against the Western Union, and Associated Press.

In addition to having to fight the organized corruptionists of the land and the power of the federal government, the democrats have been compelled to battle against the infamous associated press—a republican institution affiliated at present to democratic false election news. From the hour of the Chicago nominations the associated press has systematically lied in the interest of Blaine and his party. Returns have been purposely withheld and have been designedly falsified. Yesterday a man named French, who holds the position of manager of the associated press in this city, went out of his way to telegraph to Blaine at Augusta that he would guarantee the state of New York to him. This upon the heels of a night and morning of systematic lying in behalf of Jay Gould's candidate. It is time to reorganize the associated press in the interest of honest, incorruptible news.—N. Y. World.

The reason for the false election reports is shown when the stock reports are seen. The official list, of sales on the New York Stock Board, shows that in two days 72,100 shares of Union Pacific have been unloaded on an unsuspecting public. Gould was the largest bulder, and naturally had the greatest interest in keeping up a show of hope.

It is stated that the associated press had authentic returns giving this state to Cleveland 24 hours previous to the time it acknowledged his election. Much indignation is manifested over the course pursued by the managers of the association, when they might have settled all uneasiness and excitement on the part of the public by promptly announcing the result.—N. Y. Graphic.

A special to the New York Herald from Indianapolis contains an interview with Gov. Hendricks. Speaking of Indiana returns he said: "There has been no doubt about the vote from the beginning, yet the Western Union has been deluding the country with bulletins claiming the state would go 3,000 for Blaine and Logan. Mr. Wallack, the superintendent, must have known that the indications pointed to a plurality for the democratic ticket, yet he has been propertating a stream of lies for three days. * * * I am a trifle disappointed that there should be any delay in discovering our victory. The associated press has treated me with the greatest unfairness, but it has not deceived me. That agency made a studied effort to hide so far as it could the splendid victory achieved here. It is absurd to suppose the associated press is misinformed, because it has more numerous and prompt sources of information than we had. I feel that I have been done a personal injury in this matter, and it will avail them nothing."

A True American.

The bearing of Governor Cleveland during the entire campaign and through the exciting events of the past few days has been admirable. He has grown with every day's development, and has steadily gained in the admiration and esteem of his supporters. He has not said one word that need be altered or explained, and has done nothing which has lowered his dignity. Support of him throughout the contest was a steady increasing pleasure. Every public utterance was fresh proof that the confidence placed in him was well bestowed. There was no "uneasiness anxiety" shown on his part, and no frantic eagerness to snatch an office which it was the people's privilege to bestow unasked. No man was ever less of a demagogue. He is, as some one said during the canvass, a man of the Washington type, not showy, or "aggressive" or "brilliant" but a true American in the best sense of the term.—New York Evening Post.

Notes and News.

Manistique must have a new school house.

Ludington has one of the finest skating rinks in Michigan.

Ludington has a telephone exchange of over 70 instruments.

John A. Logan will be succeeded in the United States senate by a democrat.

There is among the sawmills at Ludington one which will cut an average of 212,000 feet of lumber a day.

J. L. Howe dug 45 bushels of potatoes in one half day last week, and he isn't a very industrious man at that.—Petoskey Record.

There were 61 less failures last week in the United States than the week before. Wonder if it was because of the result of the election.

On Wednesday, Nov. 5th, the New York World printed and sold 221,081 papers. On the same day the Chicago Daily News printed over 250,000 papers.

Reverse Cantling is not exactly a democrat, but he would receive a summer greeting if a democratic one was thrown in, he would in a republican.—Chicago Herald.

Michigan began to waver politically as soon as Conkling said anybody could carry it. It takes a great man to get away with Michigan nowadays.—Chicago Herald.

Gov. Begole has appointed Henry W. Fairbank of Flint, state commissioner of immigration to date from November 1. He has been acting commissioner ever since Commissioner Walker left the office last spring.

C. A. Newton has opened up a market on River street, for the purpose of selling off the live stock he has on hand, which amounts to one hundred head of huge of his own raising, besides nineteen head of cattle which he has traded for and bought.—Elk Rapids Progress.

United States senators will be elected this winter in Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Missouri, Nevada, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, Vermont, and Wisconsin.

The wholesale condemnation of the associated press and the Western Union telegraph company, because of their partisan manipulation of election reports, will explain the cause for our complaint last summer when we could get no reports from the democratic national convention, without the expense of "specials."

The return of events to their natural channel, after the heat and excitement of an extraordinary campaign, brings us face to face with the opening winter season. The country is properly saved and the serious part of our work begins. Let the dead bury their dead, and come back to the pleasant features of business routine with the reasonable assurance that everything will be all the livelier this winter for the short interregnum that was caused by the canvass.

Mr. Caskey, of Harbor Springs, has recently received a very fine lot of several acres of land on the flat just west of the docks, at Mackinac Island and will build a fine hotel, the plan of which will call for about $50,000. It will be built in the shape of a hollow square, with the open space in front occupied with fountains, etc, and will cover nearly two acres space. There will be about 250 sleeping rooms, each 12x18 feet in size, and there will not be a dark room in the house, the peculiar construction giving each apartment a good view. There will be 900 feet of porch, 12 feet wide, giving a magnificent promenade. The rooms will be elegantly furnished, with hot and cold water and gas on every floor. Although the hotel will be first class in every respect, the prices will be reasonable. Mr. Caskey will have a half interest in the hotel, and certain railroad and steamboat magnates will have a hand in the enterprise, and as Mr. Caskey will have 40 lots to dispose of worth $1,000 a piece, he has evidently struck a bonanza. The lumber for the hotel will be got out here this winter, and all the door and window frames, and everything of the kind which can be manufactured here, will be put together in Mr. Caskey's shops this winter.—Harbor Springs Independent.

☞Poultry for Profit, issue No. 1 of the Poultry Keeper Series, by P. H. Jacobs, W. V. B. Powle, publisher, Chicago, 60 pp there has been a great deal written on the subject of poultry, but usually the writers have been theoretical. In "Poultry for Profit" you have the practical and ripe experience of a gentleman who has spent thirty years in the poultry yard. This work is intended more for beginners in poultry raising than for those who have made this industry a life study. In the opening chapter the author points out the actual money in the business to using poultry raising a profitable business. Further on he shows the one open house which by judicious care can be realized from a single hen. "Capital for beginners" is a chapter of unusual interest and of great value—those who commence in a small way are more sure of success than those who enter into it largely and know it all without ever having had any experience. "Diseases of Chicks" and "Condensed items of interest about poultry raising" will be found of great value to all poultry keepers. All in all, the book is well adapted to the wants and requirements of fowl raisers as this work. It is handsomely illustrated, and printed on fine paper and tastefully bound. Only 30 cents, paper cover 20 cents.

Jesse B. Lull, of Horton's Bay, has had more of sorrow than of joy thus far on his life's journey. His first wife, a Miss Barnes, of Geneva, Van Buren county, died after a short married life, leaving him four small children. Last April he married his wife's sister and recently she and a younger sister were taken with diphtheria, died shortly after and were buried in one grave. Following closely this sad bereavement his four children were taken with the same scourge, and after a terrible ordeal two passed away and two finally recovered.—Traverse Herald.

Historical Society.

The society met as adjourned two weeks previous, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. O. D. Wood, the commodious parlors being well filled with members of the society to listen to the program. Society called to order by Hon. E. H. Green, president. After an address by the president, Miss Alice Cochran rendered in a very able manner an instrumental solo, followed by a duet by F. A. Smith and A. T. Washburn. Reading of proceedings of the last meeting, by the secretary. After an intermission of fifteen minutes the society called to order, and Mrs. Loveday rendered a very nice instrumental solo, followed by a spicy selection by A. T. Washburn, after which Mrs. S. C. Graves delivered a very interesting selection. H. Lee Iddings delivered a recitation in a very able manner. The meeting closed with an instrumental duet by Mrs. F. A. Smith and Mrs. O. D. Wood. The society then adjourned, to meet on Tuesday evening, Nov. 18, with Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Green.

Several new inhabitants have moved into this part of Hayes lately.

Some of the inhabitants of Hayes seem to think if wild honey was good enough for St. John (not the presidential aspirant) it is good enough for them. After providing themselves with an outfit, including a wash tub and boiler to carry home the sweet mess, they made a raid on a bee tree with another party's name attached. They traveled a mile through the woods, and labored faithfully half an hour to get the tree down. Their reward was about a teacupful of the coveted sweetness. Wonder if invitations will be issued for a honey festival?

SHIPMENTS.

A Comparison of Two Years.

We give below a summary of the shipments reported in the weekly list of clearances; also the totals for 1883, for comparison. This includes only through cargoes, and not the hundreds of tons carried on the steamers which ebow from other parts. Fishing is an important industry here, and many tons of fresh and salt fish have been sent to the Chicago market by the steamers Lawrence and Champlain. Hundreds of packages have been sent to Petoskey and shipped by rail to southern markets, none of which appear in the table. J. Milo Eaton's brush handle factory has also begun to ship finished work, but all go by rail and do not appear on the record.

A comparison with 1883 will show a marked increase in the shipments of hardwood lumber, railroad ties, wood and pig iron, while there is a decrease in cedar posts and bark. There were no shipments of lath, square timber, or telegraph poles, this year, but this is partially offset by shipments of turned work and produce.

When we consider that ready cash was an exceedingly scarce article, and that the excitement of the political campaign materially affected everything, the showing is very flattering. It gives an indication that with ordinary "good times" the commerce of Charlevoix will frequently double itself.

It must be remembered, however, that this does not represent Charlevoix alone. Boyne, Ironton, East Jordan and South Arm have contributed, each their portion. Mills and docks along both sides of Pine lake and the Arm are represented.

The items and totals represent the resources of the county. Next year they can be increased if not doubled.

TO MY NOSE.

Pale Nose! whose ruddes red have cost me many a ducat!
Oh chief vine and white,
Who wouldst lie in thy pride and sunny noon appear!
Such red and purple light!
Great Nose! who looks at thee through some huge glass at revel,
Sees of thy beauty thinks,
Fancies, remembered and the nose of some poor fool of a Jew
Who onto water drinks.
The timber-rock dolls wear resembling thee, blushes like thee;
How many rich men now
Have spent much a sum To paint thee, many hundreds,
And much time I allow.
The slaves' resort is for this illustration;
My curse is the wine,
With which I've painted thee more red than the cinnabar
In drawing of the line.
Then, O Nose! the curse, but shall they be thy ruin?
Wine is the cure for all;
Better the windows bulk should suffer some damage,
Than have the whole house fall.

ALL HALLOWEEN.

BY ALMA M'REE.

PART I.

"Retract those cruel words, dear father, and call on your own Lucilla once more."

The speaker, a young girl of eighteen summers, with hair and eyes the hue of the raven's wing, cheeks flushed scarlet with emotion, sat in the midst of evergreens, myrtle, and holly, pleading in vain with an aged, yet aged man of sixty-odd years—her father.

"Never!" came the firm, decided answer. "Gilbert Ainsley shall never be a son-in-law of mine; I swear it!" and he set his teeth firmly together.

"But, father, dear, I love him. In days gone by, when you were young, did you not love my mother even as we two love? Think twice, dear papa, ere you doom me to a life of misery and sorrow."

She arose from her verdant seat and knelt before him, her beautiful eyes full of a world of pleading in their liquid depths, her hands clasped beseechingly before her. Who could resist such eloquence and beauty?

"I tough" he thundered. "Did you ever know me to say one thing and mean another? Accept Dunton Merrivale with his £300a year, and all will be well; refuse, and a father's curse follows you." After this cruel threat, his lips remained as tightly closed as the left the little sabo, slamming the door behind him until the glass trembled, by way of emphasis.

With a heart-sick moan the suffering, girl threw herself upon her knees, and, burying her face in the cushion of the friendly chair, wept aloud.

The sound of many approaching footsteps aroused her to a sense of self-pride, and, springing quickly to her feet, she hurriedly rathed her swollen, aching eyes in cologne water, kept up in case of an emergency.

No sooner had she resumed her seat than the door opened with a crash, and a bevy of pretty, teasing girls, and as many fun-loving boys, entered the quiet sanctum.

"Here you are, Lu," exclaimed a couple of the most care-free, "like a hermit in his cell, and, I presume, quoting the old words of Burns: 'I cares for nobody, an' nobody cares for me.' To which witty saying all responded with a merry laugh, and the room fairly shook in striving to recche the sounds with justice.

"Oh, girls, do be quiet," Luella Farleigh exclaimed, with a playful shake of one forefinger. "Only see! I have but one wreath completed and a cross again. Had I better use this tribute? It is lovely! See how beautifully it trails over the white japonica and fuchsias." And she held up the trailing one admiringly.

"Use your own judgment and taste, dear," responded Nellie Arkwright sweetly, trying the effect of a bunch of white water-lilies with scarlet verbenas.

"I se your own taste, dear" mocked Dunton Merrivale, his head rocked comically on one side, in imitation of the unconscious Nellie.

"Observe that dude!" exclaimed saucy Kitty Frazer, pointing one dainty finger at the dissmiless Merrivale. "Boys, why don't you put him out? He is a disgrace to our society."

"Oh, for the superior sense and wisdom of our forefathers," exclaimed Sally Norton, a mock a cheerless disfiguring her bright, merry face.

"Well, I never!" exclaimed young Newman, with superior forthought. "If to-morrow eve isn't Hallowe'en, and preparations just begun. Why don't you work faster, girls?"

"Why don't you permit that wonderful gold watch to rest in your pocket for one moment, and use your hands at something useful? It will do you no harm, Mr. Newman complaining the rude, to be as useful as you have been hitherto ornamental." And Kitty Frazer flourished her holly-branch tragically.

"Well it was a bit of wrattha to trim that one half?" graciously inquired Bob Merrivale, brother to Dunton.

"We wish it to appear especially nice for this particular occasion; for you know that is the time that we are to try all of our tricks," explained Lucy Grey, brightly.

Their pretty callies were interrupted by the entrance of a newcomer in their midst, the merry blue eyes and constant good-humor which characterized his mischievous nature, all favorite among them all.

The young ladies all arose, with the exception of one, with one accord, and ran toward him, exclaiming in a chorus of great enthusiasm:

"Oh, what lovely moss-roses!" "Do let us see them!" "Wherever did you find them?" "You'll not refuse some of these lovely tinks, will you, now, Gil—ert?" "Oh, Gilbert, do say that you brought them for us!" etc.

One figure sat as before—silent and motionless, except when one slender hand loosed a bud to captive a proud branch or flower.

The last comer slowly wended his way thither, and, bending one knee, silently plucked a beautiful bud just opening among the glossy, jet curls. Then, arising, the yellow and black hair for one minute mingled, as he fondly whispered:

"Darling, wear one to-morrow eve at the doings, if you accept my offering my heart."

A vivid blush, for a moment only, stained the fair cheek of the lovely Lucella, then vanished, leaving her face as pale as before.

Envious whispernns now went the rounds among the fair ones, while significant glances aped from eye to eye.

"How can he admire that dusky thing?" asked a faded blonde, whose gown at make-up was attificial.

"Indeed, I cannot imagine" replied pug-nosed Belle Irvine, with a coquettish toss of her raw head.

"Some people do have such queer tastes," remarked Kitty Frazer, exhibiting a disconcerting point.

"The amount of the matter is, Gil," bob Merrivale weakly remarked, "each and every one of these worthy young ladies over here is inclined to be very much jealous that you do not style whisper something nonsensical in their delicate sea-shells—vulgarly termed ears."

"Why, Bob Merrivale!" "How dare you?" "You bad, bad boy!" and many similar pouting expressions followed the daring remark.

As the proposal was now made, and acquiesced in by all, to repair to the hall to hang their beautiful wreaths and garlands, the clatter for a time ceased.

PART II.

Among the lonely stately banks
Where moss-roses, sighing clear,
Whey flower-sacs raised the marble banks,
And stock his carriage spray
Shadowed the lonely waters with
Chamber dol mirrors.
To learn the sun and pale tinty stocks,
And cool deep fashions on Full little that night.
—Barry.

The festival was at its height. Lads and lasses all had thrown grim care to the winds; all were blithe and gay. Tricks were all the sport.

Cabbage had been pulled, until timid Lucella began to capitate on the property or safety of continuing in the branch longer, as the garden was her father's pride.

Burning nuts next caused, until when near the close of this, she was well assured that the man she accepted Gilbert was in no wise to leave the side of the unmarried lady, lest she turned her back upon them for fear of being detected watching them.

Then lots were cast to determine which of the ladies present should propose to the kiln, a quarter of a mile away, and throw into the pot a ball of the own, wind it in a ball out of the old one, and toward the latter end, when the ce expected something held the thread demand, "Who leads?" their answer would come from the kiln-pot, by name of the Christian and surname of her future husband.

The hot fell mean Kitty Frazer, who, with a rapidly beating heart, left the company for the kiln. While she was absent, the game of going alone to a looking glass with a candle; eating an apple before it, and combing her hair the while, was conferred on the little faded blonde, who simpered charmingly at unbidding the grimmer features of Bob Merrivale peeping over her shoulder.

By this time Kitty Frazer was back from the kiln with a white, scared face and wild eyes, declaring that she had seen a ghost on the way back, all in the dark and that it pursued her to the hall.

The young gallants all rushed out, but could discover nothing in the extreme darkness.

Hemp was next sown silently by twos or three of the party, Lucella Farleigh being one of the chosen ones to try the spell. Just as she was about to repeat the crowning words, "And he that is my true love to be, come after me and pull thee," a dark figure obstructed her path, and her father stood before her.

"Why, papa, how you startle me! Whatever is the matter?" And she laid her hand in entirely upon his arm.

"Hush! Be as secret as the grave! I have been thinking my words of yesterday perhaps somewhat too hard, and have concluded to allow you your own way in the matter, on one condition only."

Lucella's face brightened with the ardi-ness of pure love, and a degree of joy was observable in the soft, sweet tones, as she exclaimed:

"Oh, papa, and that is?"

"This is the condition: At 12 o'clock precisely you are to leave here alone, and to-night proceed straight to the old churchyard by the church, and, entering in, prestre the skull which rests on the tomb of John McLeod's and, as a proof that you have been there, bring it to me in your hanging basket," said the father, with a ring of triumph in his voice.

"But, papa, the night is so dark and ghostly!" said Luella, a quiver of fear in her tones.

"I am putting your love to the test! Do you refuse?"

"No, no! I will go. But remember that whatever happens, father, you are responsible for." The clear, ringing tones ceased, and the stern parent strode away muttering:

"Bah! She was always timid. I knew that she dare not venture, else I should never have proposed it! She will soon marry the Reverend Fairlee, and he as sensible as I was. Yes, he will depart—I, I went in for money and he only both; and get them, too. Bah! The idea of parents and love dwelling beneath the same roof is all nonsense." And he drove his hands into his pockets viciously.

PART III.

Onto a dark, lone, lonely road!
With blanched cheeks and wildly beating heart, Luella sped on her lonely way, her heart seeming to stand still with terror at the jump of a startled rabbit or the silent caroening of a bat.

"Was ever two miles so long before?"

At last she reached the gate leading to the house of the silent dead. Now her heart palpitated and her limbs trembled beneath their slight weight.

"Give me courage, oh, Lord!" she prayed. "For her Bertie's sake."

She passed through the gate and trembingly wended her way among the ghostly slabs and monuments to the McLeod tomb. She grasped the trusty with her handkerchief, and dropped it hurriedly into her basket. Now for home! Just as she was turning to fly homeward, something white and mishapely arose from the opposite side.

With a terrified shriek, to which the apparition mockingly answered, poor Luella flew over the ground, as though on wings, through the open gateway, and on, madly onward along the dusty roadside, never pausing to glance behind her until she had put over half the distance between her and the scene of her fright.

She then looked behind in the distance the unmistakably object in speedy pursuit. "Oh, if she could but reach her own door she it overtook her.

Oh, on she flew now more dead than alive, her breath coming in quick gasps, the cold perspiration oozing from her forehead.

At last she saw the light from her own window glimmering mercifully before her, and praying that her strength might not forsake her until she was safe within, she flew onward, not daring to look behind her.

Now she had gained the carriage drive, and with tottering, faltering steps, reached her door just as her pursuer floated in at the gate.

Thank God, she had strength remaining to turn the knob, then, with a wild, dying shriek, sank down in the basket, fell senseless at the feet of her cruel parent.

Startled by the appearance of his daughter, so like death, he rang quickly for Lisella's maid, who came from her mistress to her chamber, disrobed her, and placed her in the bed with restoratives.

It was a long time ere the lustrous eyes opened again; then, with the unearthly shriek of a maniac, a blood-curdling cry, she sank back into unconsciousness.

His father, greatly alarmed, now sent for the family physician, who slowly shook his head.

"She has received some fearful shock," he said, "and it is doubtful if she ever fully recovers her reason, but her reason, I fear, is forever gone."

"My God!" cried the father, falling upon his knees, his gray locks falling over his clasped hands. "Only save my child, and I will devote my life, if need be, to make the wrong I have done."

Brain fever had done its work. All of the beautiful golden locks had been shorn from the head of the raving girl. In her delirious ravings she constantly repeated the details of that horrible night, seeing in a spiritual form, "if the ghost had taken the skull from her grave" and acutely: "Oh, papa, I did go, for Bertie's sake, and put it in the basket. There it is, don't you see it? Up there! Take it away, the grinning ape from me," she would exclaim, pointing at the ceiling.

Day and night, Her life hung upon a single thread, and, as the hours of the case. It was now 11 o'clock at night. The beautiful eyes were closed, perhaps forever, the face seemed carved from marble.

The stricken father knelt by the bedside of the child whom, in his way, he really loved, tears coursing between his fingers and dropping upon the white counterlet embroidery the unconscious girl.

The physician stood with folded arms, breathlessly awaiting the result.

He crossed over noiselessly, and, coating himself near the lowed form of the parent, gently disposed one of the drooping hands, and, with the other hand he held the slowly moving timepiece.

The hands pointed to midnight. How death-like the silence. We seemed to hold of coming death?

Slowly the waxen lids lifted; the hands stirred feebly, while a wan but perfectly rational voice exclaimed:

"Papa."

Low though it was, it awoke the drooping man from his death-like stupor, and with a joyful cry he raised his wife, after kissing upon her lips, brow and eyes of the weak but tranquil daughter.

"Thou turning to the doctor, he said, gratefully:

"Sir, you and the good, forgiving God have accomplished this miracle."

"I just did my duty, sir," modestly exclaimed the physician. "But, with a little care now, I think there will be trouble to be anticipated, in her case, for the future."

PART IV.

SUNSHINE AND MARRIAGE.

Slowly the hours and days passed, Luella became convalescent. She praised the Lord from time to time that she did not give her to thinking deeply.

The other voice belonged to Dunton Farleigh, she felt assured. And this was what they said:

"If I had had the least suspicion that Luella would have even started for there, I should never have gone to the test, but when you saw by her actions that you were frightening her so severely, you should have desisted," he rather said, reprovingly.

"But, by Jove, you put me up to the thing, you cannot deny that! I confess I thought, perhaps, she might marry me, or my money, rather; but beyond that I meant no harm."

She heard no more, as she would not for the world be caught eavesdropping, and sinnecoed to her own apartment.

A quiet wedding took place upon the eve of the following last day of October. The old hall was decorated more extravagantly than on the year previous, while Gilbert Ainsley and the lar lands were seen to be happiest of the assembly, being mated in wedlock.

The sparkling Kitty Frazer and the generous Bob Merrivale danced up with them. A beautiful and costly present was conferred on the bride, by Dunton Merrivale, of a dainty white cottage, such as her fancy had often painted here, among a grove of evergreens. But her father's blessing, given from her sick bed, was the happiest of all to Luella on that Hallowe'en.

How Woodcock Woo.

Woodcock have certain peculiarities which endear them to the sportsman, as well as make them an interesting study to men of science. Woodcock making is essentially their own. Early in the spring the male bird, with a mate, requires to some well-known covert where the female, or, if she be congregate. It is just at sunset. All day long he has been industriously tilling himself full of long, luscious worms, and as nightfall comes his lord thought turns to affairs more sentimental. With the last ness the parade ground he looks anxiously around, and if no simpleton comes jars on his sensitive ears he begins with a low, introductory overture. Then he grows impatient and utters loud, guttural bleatings, clinking just before each one. Then he struts up and down the mossy lawn, as if his performance gave him intense satisfaction. Then he considers himself fairly introduced, and, taking wing, flies in the air, flying up in spiral circles, each growing smaller as he ascends. During this flight he utters a low, sweet, cooing note. After soaring about in a series of aerial somersaults, he swoops down to his lady-love and sings. For hours he feeds about, displaying his wing performances, until at last the female can no longer withstand his entreaties, and throwing coquetry, as Hamlet the phrase, to the dogs, she approaches with ruffled feathers and distorted plumage. The two meet and caress each other with every evidence of affection and all the by-plays of love-making, and looking their long bills in each other's grasp, as if too happy to speak, they ruse straight in the air and fly far out of sight in the darkness.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

What Is Congregational Singing?

In an "Open Letter" by Eugene Thayer in the Century, we quote the following: "Few people in reply will reply, yet few will give a correct one. In the many churches where congregational singing has been attempted, and alleged failure has been the result, the first essential feature is wanting, namely, a congregation. A few sinshipers scattered over an auditorium far too large for them do not constitute a congregation. A congregation is such a number of people as completely fills the edifice or room in which they are gathered. Five hundred people in a church, or equivalent number in a chapel would at home make a congregation. The same persons in Dr. Hall's church in New York City would not be a congregation at all; and Dr. Hall's church in the latter place would be practically a failure, however fine and effective in a church which they filled. If a church seats 5,000 people, there must be 5,000 people in it to have any congregational singing in the true and proper sense of the word. Singers may be likened to gunpowder. Condensed in the pistol, the thimbleful of powder may produce marked effect; it barrelful scattered over the lawn will not injure like who may apply a match to it. Our singers, whether choir or congregation, must be compact and together if we would realize our just expectations. Therefore, let us not attempt congregational singing until we first have a congregation. This essential lacking, let us, with or without money, get a choir to do for us what we shall fail in attempting ourselves."

Be Was Insane.

"What occupation has the defendant followed?" asked the attorney for the defense in a case of petition for the appointment of a conservator.

"He carried a bed for $1.50 a day," replied the witness.

"Had he succeeded in saving any money?"

"He had saved up $1,000."

"Well," said the lawyer, pointing his index finger at the nose of the witness, "do you swear that you believe the defendant to be crazy?"

"I do," said the witness, firmly.

"What did he do to make you think him insane?"

"He threw down his bed and started a country newspaper!"

"That will do," said the court; "put him in the asylum and the conservator will be appointed."—Paris Beacon.

An Hotel in the Sea.

A Beirout, Syria, correspondent says: The situation of the hotel where I am stopping is especially charming. It is built over the water, so that the sea actually passes under the rooms. There is a long, class enclosed balcony looking seaward, from which one never tires of surveying the lime Mediterranean by day and below. There is always variety in the movements of the sea. Now its steads is so gentle and soothing that it is the most effective of lullabies when one wishes to fall asleep. Again, the sea is in an uproar, and big spray leaps up to the very window sills. The illusion that we are actually at sea is quite hard to shake off at times. The fish have learned to watch for the refuse that is committed to the sea from the hotel galleries, and we can sometimes see the silvery backs of scores of them in the spring and early summer. Fortly holiday fellows a foot or two long come right under the balcony and place up imperiously at us. The tem tation is very strong to make them stare for their country, and not a few have been hauled up with rod and line to the broad veranda. One day somebody got a more enthusiasm than usual and cast a torpedo from the balcony into a school of inquisitive marine beauties. A boy sprang in after the explosion and brought three fat fellows to the surface. Many others were stunned, but not sufficiently to keep them float out of sight of the swimmer. Nets are also cast in front of the hotel, and many bushels of fish meat captured.

The shore along here is very rocky, like that at Haifa, Jaffa, and even along the margin of Galilee. After each storm masses of salt are formed in the depressions in these rocks.

Draft Horses,

The following is a synopsis of a healthy article which appeared in the Chicago Tribune, consisting of interviews of its reporters with the leading draft-horse dealers of America. It was headed as follows:

"Breeding of Draft Horses—One of the Important Industries of the Day—Experience of Dealers who Handle 40,000 Horses Annually—Relative Merits of Percherons, Clydesdales and English Horses—Opinions of All Leading Dealers in New York and Chicago." They are unanimous in preferring the French Breeds over all Others, as they are more enduring, last disproportionately the previous loads, and bring higher prices."

The Tribune reporters were instructed to procure opinions as to the relative merits of the different breed of draft horses being raised in this country and sold in their markets. The experience of dealers who sell perhaps 40,000 horses annually directly to those who buy them to wear out was thus obtained. This information is of immense value to those engaged in breeding horses.

Mr. I. H. Dahlman, of New York City, said: "I handle between 9,000 and 10,000 horses annually. Of the draft horses I handle the greater proportion—nearly all—are Normans-Percherons. These horses are a decided improvement on the old English, Clydesdale, English, and Belgian. We handle more of the French than any of the other breeds because they are more enduring and give higher prices for the same class of horses than any other breed. They have more endurance and use the least amount of feed of any breed. They mature sooner and are ready for the market younger than the other breeds. They will bring more money at maturity than the English or Clydesdales, and will give more satisfaction. The Percheron is the best horse we have for the money, taking everything into consideration. Our experience with the French Percherons has been very satisfactory. We have sold a great deal of them, and they have given better satisfaction than any other breed. They are more enduring and bring higher prices for the same class of horses than any other

The national convention of the W. C. T. U. recently held at St. Louis, Mo., is said to have been one of the grandest meetings ever held in that city. A full report was given in The Union Signal of Oct. 30, from which selections will be read at the next meeting of the Charlevoix union.

Ladies of the W. C. T. U., we have reason to feel proud and encouraged over the prohibition vote cast in Michigan this fall. There were 14,000 votes cast for St. John and Preston, a gain of 9,000 votes in two years, and in this county a gain of 50 votes. Let us band ourselves together as christian women to work with more zeal and courage than ever before, for "God and home and native land." It was women who started this noble work, and it must be women to carry it through. We shall have to suffer persecutions, yes, even insults, but with God on our side we shall win. Ladies and mothers, you who stay at home and find excuses for not working, can claim no glory in this victory that is sure to be ours ere long.

The general manager of the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway has promulgated a circular addressed to agents, operators, switchmen and trainmen, in which, calling attention to the many recent train casualties, he cautions them to obey to the letter the rules, regulations and special orders that are issued for safe working. Among other things the circular says: "Impress upon every one the necessity of making safety the first consideration at all times. Accept no chances and never act on supposition. Have no man on your staff, either at stations, switches, or on trains, who indulge in drink. Men in railway service who are addicted to tippling cannot be depended upon." Chicago Journal.

Enlisted for the War.

The battle for "God and home and native land," which the prohibitionists of Michigan flatter themselves they have been waging, has not settled the matters at issue to their perfect satisfaction. They decline to acknowledge their overthrow and declare that they will not run from the field of action. They have experienced a regulse, but they are not covered with confusion, neither are they as men without hope. They hold the battle of 1881 to have been but one of many that they have engaged to fight. They have enlisted for a war—a war of many battles, of more than one campaign. They say they will not quit fighting until they win a positive and permanent success—not until God's will in regard to the liquor traffic is done and home and native land are saved from the assaults of the "destroyer."

This attitude of the prohibitionists is plucky and quite consistent with their preliminary pledges. They resented the accusation that they were making a fight merely against Alpena in behalf of Preston or against Blaine in favor of St. John. They claimed to be fighting not for any man, or against any man; but rather for a great moral reform and against a great agency of evil. The only way to prove the sincerity of those assertions is to keep up the fight, regardless of the collateral and indirect effect on Blaine and Alger of their first attack on rum. To stop the fighting now would be tantamount to a confession that they have been waging merely a warfare against certain men.

What is true of the prohibitionists of Michigan is true also of the prohibitionists of all the other states. They all must continue in the service of refuge, or else they will be guilty of having deceived the public as to their motives in the contest which closed Tuesday. Detroit Tribune.

HOTEL LIFE.

Becoming Yearly More Popular Among Those Who Can Afford It.

"So you think hotel life is gaining in popularity?" ventured a Journal reporter to Mr. Welch, of the St. Nicholas. The conversation had turned on hotels, their conveniences, the guests, and the strange sights hotel men see.

"Yes, sir; for those who can afford the comfort and conveniences of hotel life it is growing more popular year by year. In a well-appointed, first-class hotel people can live undisturbed by the various ills that housekeeping is heir to, and the time will come when half the well-to-do people of the city will inhabit its first-class hotels."

"And if you were asked the cause of the growing popularity what would you say?"

"I would give two reasons prominent among the many that I might name. The richer class of people, who divide their time among the south in winter and the northern watering-places in summer, varied with an occasional trip to Europe, find that their comings and goings can be done with much less discomfort and less expense by living in a hotel than if they were maintaining an establishment of their own. With such people comfort and convenience, the avoidance of unnecessary bother and aggravating delay, enter more into their calculation than does expense."

"You mention two reasons?"

"The other is that the male members of families living in hotels are generally men in active business pursuits, only home at meal-times and in the evenings. They do not wish to have their wives burdened with the innumerable cares of a household, the trouble and vexation of servants, and the exactions of the family cares generally. To such a separate establishment, as rents go now, is more expensive and less comfortable. Taking rent, the cost of fine furniture, and the expense of a corps of servants, there is no comparison between the two modes of living."

"Yes, but that class of guests must be very exacting in their demands at a hotel."

"There's where you and probably others make a great mistake. Of all the people who use hotels they are the least troublesome and exacting. In fact, they are the easiest to please. They are accustomed to good living, a well-served table, finely furnished rooms, obedient and obliging servants, and when they find all these at their command that is all they ask. They know just what the service of a first-class hotel is, they know that there is somebody always ready to satisfy their least want and that every convenience of the house is at their disposal. Oh, no, we never have trouble with them."

"Then who are the people that do give trouble?"

"Well, probably the most trouble, some are people from the country unused to stopping at hotels. They have an exaggerated idea of their own importance, and think that everybody about the house must dance attendance on them. They seem bent on giving all the trouble they can, and make themselves and others uncomfortable. But should they stay at the hotels a month or so, it is wonderful to note the change that takes place. They soon find out that their comfort and convenience are the two two things most thought of by the proprietor, and they fall right into the groove and find that they have simply to go on living and be happy."

"Is there not some danger that the increasing popularity of the fashionable flats will result injuriously to the hotels?"

"I think not. In the first place, the expense of living in these stylish apartment-houses is much greater. In the best of them suits for a family range from $2,000 to $10,000 a year, and this means the bare walls—no furniture and no meals. Still, they are growing more popular every day, and, as the best hotels are losing none of their wealthy guests, I can only surmise that the number of people able to live in these houses and in hotels in the city is receiving constant accession."

"Do people marry from their hotel?"

"Why, certainly; that's one of the natural concomitants of hotel life. And how much pleasanter it is! The groom has but to give a single order to the proprietor specifying just what is wanted, and an army of servants are ready to carry out the arrangements without a hitch. Hotel weddings are getting to be common if fast—so much so that I know of two to come off this fall where the parties have their own houses, but, preferring the thorough system of a hotel, have given me their orders."—N. Y. Morning Journal.

Character in Gait.

It is well to beware of the man who carries his left foot in toward his right in walking, giving the impression that his right foot turns out and his left turns in. This man is a natural petty larcenist. He may perhaps have never stolen in his life, but that was because of fear, or lack of opportunity, but all the same he is liable at any time to acquaint unconsidered trifles for pure wantonness. He is of a kleptomaniac nature; but he is not nearly so dangerous as the man who deliberately lifts his log up from the thigh as though he was going to stamp it up-stairs. That man is a natural and an educated villain. In England, where the treadmill is used in prisons, many convicts acquire that peculiar step, but it is the unnatural, careful, cat-like tread of the criminal. The girl who walks with a flat foot planted squarely on the ground, as though she wanted it to grow there, may not be as attractive as the girl with the arched instep, but she is a good deal better-natured. She is sure to be a good nurse, kind hearted, sympathetic, anxious to bear the burdens of others, while the girl with the arched foot is nearly sure to be selfish, and certain to be a coquette if she walks on her toes.

The man of short, nervous steps is always a business man of energy, but if the stride is from the knee only, he is cold and selfish, caring for no one but himself. The man whose stride is long and at the same time energetic, is generally bright, always erratic and ill-balanced, often conceited, always careless, fond of admiration, generally willing to sacrifice much for praise and eclat, and, while often a good fellow, generally unreliable. The diplomat and the financier have a smooth, gliding walk, hard to describe, but easy to recognize. There is nothing sneaking about it, but it betokens careful deliberation, as though every step were duly considered before being made. Great statesmen and great philanthropists always have a loose, shambling gait, which comes from thinking about others more than about themselves. The strut of the vain man, the teetering trip of the "dude," the lounging gait of the unemployed club man, are all too familiar to call for description. To say that a person walks like a lady or like a gentleman is high praise. The gait can never be picked up in after life, it must be born in a man or woman, and cultivated in early youth. It is lost to a man when he falls into bad ways, for so surely as he loses his consciousness of rectitude and pride of honor, so surely will he pick up the gait of the loafer. An honest man, gentle or simple, never walks like a thief, and a thief can never counterfeit the gait of an honest man, but in attempting to apply these rules to men, one knows it must be remembered that all thieves are not caught, and all suspected persons are not bad.—Alta California.

A Headdress of Sponge.

Did I not tell you some time ago, when I was writing up mushroom in satin, that if you waited long enough I would find something lower still than that vegetable to decorate your heads with? and lo! the useful sponge turns up just in the nick of time, as a fashion caprice, when the world seemed to have yielded up its last-to-be-thought-of organism in the shape of fungi.

It's quite funny, as Lou Harrison would say, "very, very funny," this idea of wearing on your head the same thing with which you wash your head, but still the sponge as a novelty is immense—would it be more immense should the weery of the same be caught in a shower.

As it is, the sponge is cut flat, and decorated with loops of gold thread stuck into the holes, as it would be, it would swell up under that shower, making the head appear as a cabbage, the golden loops resting as spinet-cull within their soft cases. Oh! I would give—well, all I have in my purse—a new nickel to see the courageous women who would go out in a rainstorm with a sponge on the top of her pate. Nevertheless, being in mode, you can make up a sponge chapeau awfully cheap. For example, I see old men carrying baskets full of the coarse kind along the streets. These are perfectly worthless as washers, but for coquets—oh my! Think of it! You can beat down the man, who asks ten cents apiece, into giving you two for fifteen cents, four into worth of gold thread, judiciously glued in loops into each hole, a yard or two of mock lace, touched up with a little gold bronze, and you have a bonnet fit for anyone. Even Longtry might be proud of the latest novelty.

Curiosity of Medical Life.

As English paper gives some of the curiosities of medical life. It is the duty of one doctor to take lunch every day at a great castle belonging to a noble lord. The household is immense, and there is just the chance that there may be some case of indisposition demanding attention. He gets some of the best company and best lunches in England, and only charges a guinea for each attendance. There is a wealthy man near a great city who cannot bear to be left for the night. There is a physician of great ability who drives out of town nightly to sleep at his residence; he is consequently deprived evening society, and if he goes out to dinner has to leave his friends before wine. He has to charge his patient £1,000 a year. One young doctor has a standing engagement of £400 a year to look after the health of an old lady. She had to be inspected three times a day, was strong as a horse, and so selfish and perverse that he had great trouble with her.—Troy Times.

Deadly weapons are taken from men who carry them into the Galveston gambling and drinking houses; an employe gives checks for them, and they are returned on their owner's departure.

THE PRESIDENCY.

Canvassing the Official Vote in New York.

The Republicans in New York now do not publicly confess that that state has not such a majority for Blaine as 1,000. It is, however, admitted, spoken of in a quiet or low extent, all over the country. The situation at this writing (Sunday morning) can be summed up as follows: While the returns are coming in very slowly, the Democratic party is primarily on the side of the Associated New York Tribune and the Republican National Committee claim that they have returns sufficiently them in claiming the State for Blaine. They also charge that Democratic frauds have been committed which will vitiate the returns in the Democratic strongholds of the state. They claim that if every canvass in the south have sent in their returns, and the total shows Cleveland's plurality to be 1,200. The National Republican Committee bases its calculations on the assumption that the Republicans of Brooklyn have carried the Kings County ticket and saying that if there is any the contest of Mr. Cleveland will be heavily contested in. The New York Democratic Executive Committee issued an address claiming that the Republican managers were "Blaine's majority in New York will be 1,000." Hubbard, William H. Vanderbilt and others crowded to Cleveland congratulating him much for election. The Democrats of the country, at the suggestion of Chairman Barnum, held meetings in nearly and cities over the country on Saturday and Sunday nights to hear the news from New York. Rejoicings were by other Cabinet houses in its works were let off, and there was a general rejoicing in the country.

A dispatch from New York City, early on the morning of the 12th, gives the following report of the official canvass of the votes by counties, which is not yet fully in: Cleveland's plurality in the state is 1,047. The result of its value for Presidential election has been declared to thirty-three of the sixty counties of the State. Last year returns report of County Clerks showed a Democratic plurality of 1,047. To-day's returns show a net loss in Blaine of four votes. Cleveland's plurality is now 1,047, with two counties to hear from. Cleveland would, in all probability, report the result of their canvass to-morrow. To-day's report of Brooklyn is in form. No surprise is made of the result in Kings County, which is a Democratic county. Cleveland's majority in Kings County will be 1,000 or 1,500. The Republicans would show any change from those already given.

The canvassed returns received by the Department of State from the 62 counties of the state indicate a change of 45 votes in favor of Blaine, against sixty in favor of Cleveland. No returns had been received by the Republican National Committee at the Windsor Hotel, and Chairman Jones, of the Republican State Executive Committee, was not in his office.

Gen. John S. Kenna, a prominent Republican from Arkansas, said he believed the official canvass would make no material change in the presidential returns. "If there is an error, said Gen. Kenna, it will be in the Democratic City in the country the people know Democratic hours after the closing of the polls what the result is. I think it is a sure thing."

"The official canvass of the Kings County Board of Supervisors began in any earnest yesterday, lasting until the 12th, and continued for hours. Hayes votes not Blaine's."

Jacob Reilly, of Tammany Hall, said to night there is no doubt of the election of Cleveland and of Alderman Wales, Republican, as President of the Board of Supervisors by the votes of Tammany Alderman. Mr Reilly said: "Wales has often voted with Tammany Democrats in the board, and he is a Democrat at heart. Cleveland's majority will be 1,000 or 1,500 and the result of canvass will show the exact of the electoral vote as a cut matches a mouse.

"Rumor Chairman Barnum retained in the Democratic National Committee by act in any Republican Chairman Jones, and that the Republican Committee has not been notified of William M. Evarts is not for their side."

As New York displays of the 12th inst. are "a change favorable to Blaine of 22 votes in the few at which the Board of the Board Assembly Districts, as against the returns published in the Republican Tribune, the Board of Canvassers of this county to-day, has on careful comparisons of the polls and pure returns it was found that the difference will be made up in districts to be canvassed.

The Democratic Committee issued in addition to the foregoing already reported complaints their official canvass of the vote for Presidential electors in detail. The counties besides New York and Bluff that have not published the count are Dewey, Cattaraugus, Chautauqua, Erie, Orange, St. Lawrence, Schuyler and Yates. The Democratic Committee claims that from all these counties saving that the official count is not. Hoyt in vary lines in the counties cited, in the Nov. The delay in making the footings in the counties named is caused by the failure of the clerks to make their results in total form. The summary of the returns in the counties of the state changes from the reported figures in the eighty counties that made returns to-day a little more than other the apparent gains for Cleveland that were reported in forty-one counties on Saturday night. Cleveland's plurality is 1,047. The totalities are 1,047 to 1,200. The result will be caused by changes in New York and Kings.

"The final fight is expected to be made in this city. The local issue of votes which Mr. Gregg Blaine, as counsel for the Republicans, will be made to contest, is the question of the ballots, amount to 1,000. About one-third of these, it is claimed, are for the Democratic ticket, and the rest are Blaine, by John and other votes, which were unscounted, excluded or otherwise added to swell the Cleveland vote."

The result in New York is the closest ever known in any large State.

The official returns from fifty-nine of the sixty-seven counties of Pennsylvania and an estimate of the remaining eight counties give Blaine a plurality in the State of 5,[illegible]. The counties from which the official vote has not yet been received are Allegheny, Butler, Carbon, Montgomery, Philadelphia, City proper 80,[illegible] 22,542 majority. Four years ago it gave Garfield 35,[illegible]. Allegheny County, containing Pittsburgh, gave Blaine 18,[illegible], to 12,[illegible] for Garfield; and Lancaster county gave Blaine 8,[illegible], against 6,[illegible] for Garfield.

CHARLEVOIX, - MICHIGAN.

Settled.

The official canvass of New York has been completed, and Cleveland's plurality is 1,107, taking his lowest vote on any elector against Blaine's highest.

"How it will Effect the Times."

The Muscelona Herald like many other republican papers predicts direful results to follow the election of Cleveland and says that "if Cleveland is elected, and the democrats get a majority in the senate, the inhabitants of our thriving village will see far harder times during the coming winter than they have ever before experienced." Does the editor claim that hard times this coming winter will result from democratic government? Does not the editor know that Cleveland will not be inaugurated till next March, and the congress elected November 4th, will not hold a regular session till one year from next December. Then why will the times be any harder this winter than they were last under the same government? A succeeding paragraph in the same article explains it, and shows that the republican party managers and friends propose to make times just as hard as they can. Read this: "As soon as dispatches were received announcing the probable election of the democratic nominees, John Otis & Co., owners of the Muscelona iron furnace, immediately counter manded an order for six hundred carloads of ore. The above named firm informs us that they only have ore and wood sufficient to run them until the first of January, which they will blow out their stack and wait for further developments." This is what will make times hard. This is the principle that would ruin a commonwealth they cannot rule. If the republican party controlled all the machinery of the country the party managers would order an entire suspension of business for the purpose of starving laboring men into submission.

What Ails Business.

Relative to the business situation one thing is reasonably certain. What ever uneasiness or depression there may be at this time which did not exist a month ago is due to the refusal of certain conspirators in New York to abide by the result of the recent election.

If Jones, Elkins, Blaine and others had promptly submitted the fact that on the face of returns Governor Cleveland had a plurality, their demand for the official count would have caused no uneasiness, but they did nothing of the kind. They persistently misrepresented the figures as long as that was possible, and then they abandoned the returns entirely and resorted to "chimes" which had no basis of fact. Their conduct was such as to give rise to the suspicion that they were manipulating the return, and had in some way to gain by stealth that which everybody knew they had not secured in open day.

All the distract occasioned by the present extraordinary situation in politics is due to this one cause and not, as has been alleged in partisan quarters, to the election of Governor Cleveland.—Chicago Herald.

Business Enterprise.

The following special telegram to the Chicago Times from Gulson, Ill., shows that all important business is not frightened to death because of Cleveland's election. "The Chicago and North Wisconsin railroad company have commenced grading their road at Sycamore, Ill., and are rapidly working this way. The force employed is a large one, and it is thought that the work will be finished to the junction, six miles west of Gulson, by the first of January. This is the company that is supposed to be fostered by the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, as it is Mr. Wisson, Alnin and Northern road, now being constructed along the east bank of the Mississippi.

A special to the Detroit Free Press from Brighton, dated Nov 12th, says: "The D. Thompson foundry resumes to-day and the democrats claim it under the prospective new administration. The suspension of those works has been a great inconvenience to Brighton for a year past."

Notes and News.

That mule must have kicked terrible high, from the apparent effect.

How do our prohibition friends like the classification given them in the Sentinel last week?

"Jim" has furnished a fine dish of "crow" for those editors so much interested in his record before election.

Prohibitionists certainly have reason to hope for as good work from a fusion legislature as they have from a party of broken pledges.

That "notorious libertin" may yet succeed in unearthing some of the most disgusting rottenness with which this government was ever cursed.

Gov. Hendricks, of Indiana, said in a speech at Indianapolis, the other night, that government securities have advanced in price as a result of Cleveland's election.

That "national tragedy" may turn out a national blessing by ridding the government of a lot of worthless leeches who have lived and fatted on public patronage, and have little knowledge or care how anyone else exists.

If the prohibitionists of the state of New York (and other states) were not more devoted to principle than some of their would be managers, they probably would drink their hired of whiskey, and without much compulsion either.

Before the editor of the Sentinel again refers to "one door short," or indulges in similar insulting epithets, let him read the eighth chapter of John, third to eleventh verses, and apply the same to himself on general principles.

Instead of denouncing the majority the minority would do well to search out themselves that they may have some claim for consideration from the victors in the contest. This is a free for all race, and it is only fair that the rewards go around a little.

The Traverse Herald rejoices that the prohibitionists have unloaded themselves from republican slumbers and says that "The republicans will have to bother themselves with that prohibition amendment business next winter, thanks to prohibitionists themselves."

"Justice travels with a leaden heel but strikes with an iron hand. Wait till the flood gate is lifted, and a full head of water comes rushing on. Wait and you will see fine grinding then." Jeremiah Black before the Electoral Commission. N. B.—The time predicted by Mr. Black has arrived.

Do not be surprised if the telegraph announces a destructive fire in any of the departments at Washington before next March, entailing the loss of valuable records. All evidence of crookedness must be put out of sight before the new administration gets hold of the books. This has been done in the past, and no doubt will be again.

Democrats, a few months hence you will be asked to subscribe your name to a paper recommending a continuance of the present local administration of the postoffice. Before you put your names to such a paper, read carefully the Charlevoix Sentinel of November 12th, then ask yourself if the editor deserves any consideration at your hands. He has grossly insulted every man who voted anything but the straight republican ticket. He has forfeited all claim for your consideration.

Wm. H. Barker, assistant secretary of the New York republican state committee, assigns Blaine's defeat wholly to the prohibition vote, and says: "You can imagine that now I have no personal love for the prohibitionists. I have hitherto put my hand in my pocket and contributed my mite in behalf of the temperance movement. The other day a collection was taken in my church in behalf of temperance. I refused to contribute. When asked my reason I replied that the prohibitionists had done all in their power to defeat the only party from which they had any show of recognition, and hereafter I intended that so far as I was concerned they could dispense with my help. Henceforth I am in favor of free liquor." Is it not a fact that those republicans who have generally been so radical and loud-mouthed in their support of the prohibition party have at the same time been really in favor of "free liquor?" Have not their professions been made to catch prohibition votes, and their work ever and always in the interest of "free liquor" and also to catch votes? The record of the g. o. p. in Michigan is of that color.

"The rebels have at last taken Washington."—Charlevoix Sentinel. Yes, and now the nation is hanging breathless in the agony of suspense in the expectation that some red-headed rebel like Nelson Aiselin, some more constructed confederate like J. Milo Eaton, or some blood thirsty secesh like L. D. Bartholomew, will take the Charlevoix postoffice, and, deprived of the assistance of the postmaster editor of the Sentinel, the government will go down in anarchy and ruin, while the light of our present civilization will be snuffed out, and the gloom of the dark ages will again envelop the land!—Harbor Springs Independent.

The abuse heaped upon prohibitionists by the republican press of Michigan is not conducive to a fraternity of feeling. It proves, among other things that republicans solicit aide for prohibition reaches only for votes, and not for works. The republican party came into power by its strict adherence to a principle. The prohibition party can hope to fulfill its mission only by strict adherence to principle. When it ceases to truckle to the republican managers, as a sort of side show, it will find plenty of good democratic voters ready to stand up and be counted. There are plenty of good democrats praying for prohibition, but who cannot consciously vote to sustain a party which repealed the prohibitory law made by democrats, and who have violated every pledge it ever made tending toward the suppression of the liquor traffic. It looks now as if the mask thrown off would make plenty of prohibition votes before another election.

We do not believe, and doubt if the editor of the Petoskey Record himself believes what he charged last week to the democratic party, that the election of Cleveland "will reverse the whole financial policy of this government for four years to come, place the late confederacy in absolute control of the nation; make the confederate soldier an equal claimant on the bounty of the nation with the union soldier; give a money value to confederate war bonds, place in power a party committed against temperance legislation by every utterance of their national conventions for fifty years past" etc. etc. Are the men who fought for a principle now ready to undo the work of that great struggle? Are they not too much interested to forfeit their possessions and go back to the systems and circumstances of 25 years ago? The democracy of today is not the democracy of auto war times any more than the republican party is the old whig party. The democratic party is as much a new party, and as much committed to progress and reform as any party can be with a new name. It is no more likely to commit such a grevious error than the "people," or "union," or any other new party in opposition to the old republican.

A letter from a republican friend this week, touching politics and the elections, with other matters, contains the following: "If the tariff is to be tampered with, I most sincerely wish that they will make a clean sweep of it,—no half-way measures, please. I think I can stand four years nipping, pinching, patching, and rags as well as any other toiling man, especially for the lesson it would learn all parties. Now go to like good fellows, and let us have all kinds of cheap goods from Europe." This is what all republicans wish. They are hoping and praying that the democratic party will overdo all right and reason and shatter the government at a single blow, that they may the better come into power again four years hence. While it can be satisfactorily shown that a greater freedom of commerce will benefit our commonwealth, the democratic party itself is not agreed on the limit of that freedom. The absolute free trade wing of the party is in a minority, and while this is so there will be no "clean sweeps." Reform is desired. Revolution is not reform; a "clean sweep" is revolution. The sentiment of the masses is growing more and more favorable to a reduction of tariff taxation, but there are too many conservative men to permit such a revolution as the removal of all duties in a single administration. Such reforms must always come slowly—only so fast as the masses of people understand, and adjust themselves to the new systems. So long as this conservative element maintains the balance of power in the party, our republican friends may continue to hope and pray, in vain, for some outburst of democratic folly.

How to Furnish Bedrooms.

Bedrooms are more luxurious than ever in the modern American houses, and this is altogether the wrong place for luxuries of sumptuous furnishing. A bedroom should have as little furniture as possible beyond what is absolutely essential. No draperies which can hold the dust, no stuffed furniture, and no carpets other than soft rugs for the feet. French bedrooms are furnished much in this way, and are only used as sleeping apartments. A boudoir leading of the chamber may be as luxurious and tempting as possible, but the bedchamber should not be a lounging place ever, less the air becomes vitiated. An English brass bedstead is always a most admirable piece of furniture for a bedroom, since it combines cleanliness and durability. These bedsteads are not costly in the end, and are easily kept bright. An open grate fireplace should be in every chamber in the house. The floor should be of hard wood, with a smooth surface, or, if of pine, it should be painted or shellacked and varnished. There should be no hangings over the bed or at the windows. If the bedroom is to be attractive, its attractiveness should be in its simplicity and extreme cleanliness. There are other rooms in which it is possible to exhibit as much grace and taste as inclination dictates, but the nursery and bedrooms should have no pretensions aside from healthful and comfortable appointments.—San Francisco Argonaut.

A negro witness in Macon, Ga., testifying in a slander case, gave this as the result of his observations: "If you ride slow you turn over yourself; if you ride fast you turn over somebody else."

The Walnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, seventy-five years old, is the oldest theatre in America. It was originally built in an outskirt; it is now in the center of wealth, life and fashion. The building of the theatre was begun in 1808.

A dog in the neighborhood of Los Angeles, Cal., is passionately fond of honey and to gratify his taste he robs hives whenever an opportunity offers. He has grown quite expert in the business and can extract the sweet food with great dexterity.

A philanthropic London lady has bought land in Manitoba of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and is to establish a colony of deaf mutes. She will provide an instructor in farming, and is to expend a considerable sum of money in that experiment.

The paper with the largest circulation in the world is the Petit Journal of Paris. It now circulates 750,000 copies per day. Its director, Mr. Hyppolite Marinoni, is the inventor of the Marinoni perfecting presses. He was originally a cattle broker.

Cuba is losing the services of the foreign officers in her army and navy just when she needs them most. The Germans are being called by their Government, which is just now cultivating friendly relations with France, and the English officers seem to be resigning voluntarily.

While the elderly Baroness Burdett-Coutts appears always in public dressed in the quietest black, her companion, her young husband, Mr. Bartlett-Burdett-Coutts, is distinguished for his dressing in clothes of the extremest fashionable cut and of thunderously loud colors.

A returned missionary says that the Zulus in their native state are one of the finest races in the world. All the men are honest, and all the women chaste. But as soon as they are converted to Christianity, and begin to wear clothes, they generally become vicious and dissolute.

In Marlin's Vineyard the ratio of dead insects to the population is one in every 150 persons, a ratio greater than in any other portion of the county. Two centuries ago two cousins in the Marlow family were married, from which can be traced a hereditary line of deaf mutes.

Walt Whitman, alluding to the recent earthquake, said the other day: "I believe with Kant in the unsentimentality of things. It is doubtful if want we see around us has any real existence. Everything is debonair, exquisite and shaky." Want must have been dabbling in railway stocks.

When it rains in Mexico it pours. At Pachuca a number of men were passing a bridge when a storm began. One of them ran under the bridge for shelter. The river rose so quickly that he could not escape, and was swept down the stream many miles, being torn to pieces on the trees and stones.

The most expensive thing and the hardest thing to get in Europe is pure water. As the barometer goes in Switzerland, where the ice-crowned Alps are in sight, they charge you for ice-water to drink. There is no water on the cars, and at the stations they look at you in amazement if you need it. Interest in Toronto Globe.

The German soldiers are the proudest in Europe. The army is considered a school for its 500,000 young men. They are never compelled to do menial work. A Prussian officer who would compel a soldier to do the work of a servant would be considered. Some of the rich German private soldiers keep servants of their own.

The old women of an English village have been provided by one of Ruskin's disciples with distaffs, spinning-wheels and looms, and already the old-fashioned linen fabrics span and woven by them are in demand. "Ay, but they make good and true stuff," said one old woman of the town.—Waterbury American.

The most artistic of Italian furniture, made from precious woods inlaid with gold, mosaics and ivory, is turned out in Bergamo by a firm that has been engaged in the business during a century. Old and new specimens of its workmanship are much sought after by foreign connoisseurs for the adornment of palaces and country villas.

The new precious gem discovered a couple of years ago in a mine near Bridgewater, N. C., and known as the "Hiddenite," is said to be almost equal to the diamond. It is of a clear, beautiful grass-green tint, sparkling like a diamond, and is very hard. The gem has aroused much more interest in England than in this country.

Cremation is making great strides in France. The Prefect of the Seine means to establish Siemens furnaces in several of the cemeteries of Paris, and proposes to cremate all persons whose bodies are not claimed by their friends. If this experiment proves successful, the Government will probably increase a general bill on cremation.

New Jersey has a law to protect children of the poor from overwork. The authorities want to enforce the law, but they are constantly hampered by the opposition of parents, who connive at ages of their children, and train them to represent it as greater than it really is, in order that they may secure the trifle of their offspring's unlawful labor.

Some of the young ladies have been criticising the boys for not having some life to get up a dance or party of some kind. Now as it is leap year, we think it would be a good scheme for the girls to get up something just to show the boys how to do it for the next four years.

A few days before election we received (with the compliments of the Chicago Daily News) a valuable campaign map of the western states, showing railroads, counties, principal towns, congressional districts, portraits and biographies of all the presidents, complete vote by counties at the last state and presidential election, and other valuable information.

Mr. Sam Thatcher was elected county clerk of Charlevoix county, at the last election. We know of no man who is a republican that we would like to see elected better than Sam. He was one of the very first to settle in eastern Charlevoix, and has done much to bring that section up to its present improved state. He now has been elected clerk, and will remove to Charlevoix village. His neighbors will regret to have him leave them, but it will be a gain to his children as they can have the advantages of better schools than where he now lives. Sam will please accept the congratulations of the Democrat as we know of nothing against him only he is a republican.—Petoskey Democrat.

East Jordan.

Question: "Who will have the postoffice?"

It is rumored that S. G. Isaman will remove his store and merchandise to East Jordan the coming winter.

Jeff Waibel's new building is announced to that part of town. It is not yet known what he will have in side.

Lumbering operations have commenced but on a small scale, and the outlook for men working at that business is not very flattering.

There is one thing the people of East Jordan are proud of and that is her skating rink, with one of the finest floors in the state and good accommodations. It is well patronized.

Rev. Mr. Bryant, of Brighton, Mich., has been supplying the pulpit of the new Presbyterian church for the two past Sundays. He will probably be employed for an indefinite time.

D. B. Jerome, who has the Hulbert house property, is painting, renovating, and giving the house a general overhauling. The hotel will be second to none in northern Michigan for accommodations when opened, which will be in about ten days.

The new Odd Fellows hall in the second story of Mr. Warne's new building is nearly completed, and will be occupied by them in the near future. The good templars will also meet in the same hall on Friday evenings, when they will be pleased to receive visitors from any of the sister lodges.

Historical Society.

The society met on Tuesday evening last with Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Green a large number being present. The meeting was the most enjoyable of the season. The following is the program as prepared by the executive committee.

Meeting called to order by president E. H. Green. Minutes of the previous meeting read and approved. Instrumental solo by Mrs. R. W. Kane. Intermission. The historical reading by Dr. S. C. Graves, subject, "Founders of Allopathy," was well received. Music by male quartette. Intermission. Select reading by R. W. Kane. Instrumental solo Miss Maggie Green. Select reading by Mrs. Bartholomew. Music by male quartette. After the above the regular order of business was resumed, after which the quartette entertained the society by request. The society then adjourned to meet with Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew on Tuesday evening next, Nov 25. The following programme has been prepared:

Music, Miss Blanche Bartholomew.
Historical reading, Robert Miller.
Intermission.
Music, male quartette.
Select reading, Miss Flora Nelson.
Piano solo, Miss Winnie Bartholomew.
Select reading, Jus. E. Wood.
Music quartette club.

POOR THIRD MOTHER.

BY MARGARET ETTINGS.

They were talking of the glory of the land beyond the skies,
Of the light and of the gladness to be found in Paradise,
Of the flowers ever blooming, of the never-ceasing songs,
Of the wind-harps through the golden streets of sapphire white-reflected things,
And my father, leaning coldly back in his easy chair,
(Father always was a master hand for comfort everywhere)
"What a joyful thing I could be to know that my child was there!"
One would strive to make a welcome from the blessed shining shores,
And Deborah, our oldest girl, glanced upward from the reed
She was painting on a water-jug, and murmured, "Yes, indeed!"
And Jessie, the next in age, a moment dropped her book,
And a "Yes, indeed!" responded, with a most ecstatic look.
But mother, gray-haired mother, who had come to be very the poor
With a patient sorrow on her thin face, leaned falintly at her door,
Poor mother! no one ever thought how much she had to do—
And said, "I hope it is not wrong to agree with you,
But seems to me that when I die, before I join the blessed
I'd like just for a little, while to be in my grave and rest."

A DYING CONFESSION.

BY LILY M. CUBBY.

There was no color in the outer world that day—no vivid color. The leaves, which lingered still upon the trees, were languid and saffron-hued from the fading strength. The sky was clouded over and the atmosphere chilled with the whisper of approaching rain.

I had been thinking hard about my trouble. Long before dawn I had wakened from horrible dreams of Mignon—dreams that she was false; long before dawn I had tossed from side to side upon my bed, and felt my eyeballs burning and my heart beating madly. I had tri. d then, desperately, to compose myself, to master my emotions; but I could not, for always as I closed my eyes the came before me, brilliant and beautiful, taunting and terrible. She came and erased me with her superb glance, her scornful lips.

As I lay waiting for the dawn, I reviewed the past. My thoughts traveled swiftly back to the day of our marriage, half a year before. Since then what wretched fears, what helpless terror had come to me by my portion! In making her my wife, I had hoped to make her truest mine own forever; and now it seemed to me that she could laugh to look upon my dead face.

When daylight came at last, I arose and my myself within the mirror—a ghastly, haggard, desperate creature. And suddenly I felt that she had wrecked my body and my soul. I said to myself that this should last no longer; that I would know the worst and abide by the knowledge.

She would return that day; she had been two nights absent, on a visit to friends of hers (whom yet I had not seen), up in the country. At least this was the story she had told me. I had not sought for proof or disproof of her words. I had not dared to seek for it.

She would not arrive until evening; and the day yawned before me like a terrible chasm. I wanted neither food nor drink, but wandered aimlessly about our apartments—our home, which might have been a little paradise, far above the ch0 and flow of the stormy town. Our home, which I had cared to make so dainty she might love me for the task. Alas!

There was no color in the outer world, but even in the space where I walked singly to and fro, the flames of purgatory danced before my sight.

I could not choose but doubt her, now that I had found that letter among her private papers—found it in my frenzied search the night before. A letter from a former lover.

I read it many times that morning; it was brief, yet full of meaning.

"I love you; I am wretched when away from you. I cannot rest until we meet again."

That was how it read.

It had no date.

I felt no compunctions at having searched her desk. Why had she been false to me? Had I not been faithful and kind and loving? Had I not cherished her according to my vow?

It was now a long time since I had first noticed certain peculiar little actions of hers—impatient tossings of the head, restive sighs, and curses of the lip, which seemed to say, "you weary me with your assiduousness, your jealous care. I love you no longer."

And then her latest actual complaint: "Why do you torment me so? Have I no individuality? For pity's sake, be rational!"

Rational! With that petulant voice ringing in my ears!

I continued to wander about our rooms. At times her face came before me—the face most dear to artists eyes—beautifully shapen, faultless in coloring, having the classic features of Greece and the marvelous eyes of Italy—eyes made fit to dizzy all men who looked behind them. And all around that face were rings of soft brown hair that reddened in the sunlight.

As the day dragged wearily along, I thought of various methods by which to assure myself of what I must know—or die. And so at length I framed my resolution.

I would not go to meet her at the station, but, indeed, remain at home, concealed, that she might believe me gone. I would place a note upon the center table, underneath the chandelier, in the little parlor. This note would promise my return the following day. Her actions upon finding this would tell the story.

Where to conceal myself?

Somewhere in the little parlor, where she would enter and discover my note.

I made a slow circuit of the room, inspecting carefully each separate article of furniture, and considering that, if any, shelter it might afford.

I started from the door leading into our bed-chamber, and passed leftward from the same.

First came Mignon's writing desk, a pretty little ebony affair, in which she treasured many things, as well I knew. Some old photographs were there, some faded flowers, some scraps of poetry clipped from magazines, some letters. I had not replaced the note I had found. It still burned over my heart,—burned as it were a living coal.

I looked for some time at the desk; I saw things with wondrous distinctness. There was dust—minute particles of dust upon the ledges. I rubbed it off with my bare finger.

Next was the window. I pushed aside the Turcoman curtain and looked down upon the street. How dull and cold the whole world seemed! How empty! Before the window stood the little chair she often sat in; just a little willow rocker with a square of painted satin. My heart ached harder as I fancied her sitting there.

Past these stood her piano. Past this the music-rack, with all her songs upon it. Ah, me!

Next, standing diagonally across the corner of the room, the curious old clock that I had brought from my native land at her request. I put back upon the door, as if to open it. Then I stepped and wandered if one could not stand with ease behind the antique time-piece.

I tried it.

Between the windows on the third side of the room was the lounge upon which I had so often lain and heard her singing in the twilight; sometimes she had come to sit beside me, and lay her small, soft hand upon my hair.

I turned another corner and came to the door, through which she must enter. Past this were chairs, and a little stand heaped with cabinet photographs, her own among the rest. A chimney with brass-trim in the fourth corner, and so I came again to the door of the bed chamber. After a time I thought again of the old clock, and returned to examine its position.

I drew it out a little further and slipped in behind.

The room grew dusky; the afternoon was slipping away.

I walked up and down the room; up and down, up and down thinking. I had not broken my fast the lifelong day. My mouth seemed parched, my tongue swollen. I felt the shadow of approaching exhaustion.

As it grew dark I went out to a friend's and brought a little bunch of flowers, carnations, with surrounding sprays of mignonette.

Coming back, I stopped and spoke to the janitor of the building, giving him a message for my wife, who must soon arrive.

I went up hurriedly after this, for there was no time to lose. I put the sweet and spicy blossoms in a tumbler of water, and set the tumbler on the center-table, underneath the chandelier. I had a vague notion that the little offering might touch her heart and cause it to yearn for me, who loved her so. I wrote my note hastily, telling her I had been called away, but would return to-morrow. I placed the note beside the flowers. I did one jet of the gas above, and left it burning dimly.

It was time for her to come. I grew each moment more feverish and impatient. I felt, besides, a fantasy that some long fashion I had back through the bad shadows to the dressing-room for a swallow of ice-water. There was some fruit in a dish upon the table. I thought perhaps a taste of this might cool my parched. I took an orange and hurried back to the parlor, slipping out of my hiding-place behind the clock.

Why did she not come? It was past the time now, and I began to imagine all terrible things. I fancied that she had come, had met the janitor at the entrance, had received from him my message and taken advantage of my absence to return or send word to some lover. The thought fairly cloaked me. My throat was painfully parched.

I took out my large pocket-knife and began to cut the orange. My hands trembled constantly.

At length I heard footsteps. This waiting was torture, but I endured it.

The gas burned dimly. The spicy fragrance of the flowers upon the table seemed to fill the room. I stood motionless, listening, for the sound of her latchkey. I still clutched the orange and its open pocket-knife.

I held my breath. * * *

Then I heard a step, and let the door swing carelessly after her; it did not close entirely. She gazed inquiringly into the dusky room and toward the table.

"Flowers?" I heard her say. "Carnations—mignonette."

I saw her take my letter in one hand, while with the other she reached up to turn the gas higher. The chandelier was high, and she was not very tall, so that she did not reach it at the first effort. Her little form and beautiful, spiritual face seemed to draw me toward her. I longed to rush out and clasp her to my heart. Heavens! what demon held me back?

She balanced there on tiptoe.

"I wonder it he will come?" I heard her say. Then I heard something else—a soft sound, as if the wind had pushed ajar the door she had not fully closed.

She did not turn; she did not seem to hear; her slender fingers were upon the gilt of the chandelier.

What happened next was swift and strange—and all in silence. A man had stepped within the room, closing the door noiselessly, and darting forward, encircled her head with his hands, blinding her eyes ere she had seen him.

Something heavy dropped from his arm to the floor. But not a word was spoken.

She did not scream or struggle; it seemed to me there was a smile upon her lips, as if—she—knew—her—lover.

The gas went suddenly out.

Just for a second then I felt myself crouching like a wild beast. The next second I seemed to know my sentence of hell.

She was in her lover's arms, and I—I sprang out to where they stood.

"Fiend—devil!" I cried out, and struck at him with the knife, in the darkness.

I heard a low moan; something fell to the floor and some one crept to the door and groped for the latch.

God! What was this? A terrible fear seized me. What had I done?

The door finished open. I saw him fleeing from me down the lighted hall, and Mignon quivered at my feet.

* * *

I lit the gas; how, I know not, closed the door. But when I looked upon her lying there, her white face frozen by my heart's blood.

"My God be merciful!" I tried to whisper.

I had a terrible fear of touching her. I was growing cold from head to foot. I clung to a chair for support.

Her eyes unclosed; she looked up and, seeing me, tried to smile. She moved her lips, but uttered no sound.

Then I saw her slowly drag herself toward my feet, until she could reach up and clasp my knee.

"Oh, God!" I moaned, with frozen tongue.

She smiled at me, though her eyes were dimmed with death. Her lips parted for one soft, sighing syllable.

"Love —"

And she fell back and was still.

I knew that she was dead—that I had murdered her instead of the coward who had fled and left her to die. I could move now; all was over. My pretty wife, my Mignon, lay dead at my feet and I could move.

I dared not bend as yet to lift her. I saw the bundle he had dropped. I stooped and lifted it—it was heavy. I opened it with trembling haste and looked stupidly at the contents. Then I began to shriek aloud for aid, for all the world to come and view that she was murdered.

They came in at my wild cries; they lifted her tenderly, as I had had no strength to do. They took the sack from my hands—the sack of burglar's tools!

And still I shrieked.

The blood-stained knife was on the floor. They neared to think it had been his.

Mignon was dead. They laid her upon her bed, and crossed her hands and set some candles on the table.

I dared to look upon her face once by as white and peaceful as a fly.

"Oh, Christ!" I said "if I have wished myself hell."

They took me out. It was at daybreak that I fell from my packed the newspaper. I read the news there, and believed it. I stood before the window with the paper in my hand. I recognized that it had no date. Why had I not noticed the envelope—the postmark? I would do so now.

I could not speak, breathe without great pain. When I realized what I had done, I cried loudly for death. The postmark was old; the letter was in an old one, written to Mignon ere she became my wife.

I had slain a blameless one, an angel.

I stood staring out of the window. It was raining miserably in the dreary street below. The gray dawn grew grayer. Mignon was dead!

Reminiscences of Herzegovina.

There were about twenty-five of us, and for eight days did each of us the anything except boiled mutton. Every night a sheep was killed; a fire lighted inside a tent to keep the blaze from the wateful eyes of the Turk, just whose distance we were running, and the flesh of the sheep, before it had been an hour dead, was cut into lumps and thrown into a cauldron of boiling water. After three days of this diet I could stand it no longer, and for the next five days I rode down the country without tasting a bite of anything. I had a little rum-and-water, but that was all. Hunger is the worst on the second day. On the third day you cease to feel hunger, and you begin to lose flesh, but I kept up my splendid scamper, were some of these insurgents; although some were perfect gentlemen, others were unquestionably brutes. Peko Pavlovitch was one of the latter. He would spitefully ride near me, stand about six feet six inches, wore armor in his back, and although personally most courteous to me, was the figurant upon I have ever seen in a white slave. I was sitting one day in a coffee room with a flag of truce from Monkhitz beside me for permission to send its mails to the beleagured town of Gorazdac. Peko Pavlovitch could not read, but called for the paper while the contents were being interpreted to him. He then turn-it into fragments, fling the pieces into the messenger's face, and waving his hand with a savage expression declared, "That is my answer." The messenger went down stairs. Before he reached the landing I heard a groan. The man was killed. Another specimen of Peko's uncle of warfare which I witnessed was an unfortunate Turk, whose back Peko had scored with his knife and ripped off three long strips of skin with his bayonet. The poor wretch was more dead than alive.

A LITTLE EXCITE.

"And so you are going, you say, to—to—marry? I'll confess I was quite surprised at the news." "Yes, we are going to be married." "Then will not it a very fit to know, Mr. Brown, what I think of your choice?" "Yes, I think you ought to know, Miss Green." "Then I will not keep you in suspense. I think you are a fool!" "Good morning, Miss Green!" "Good morning, Mr. Brown!" "I shall be happy to see you at our wedding!" "Good morning!" "Good morning!"

Hard on Jarphly.

"You can't deceive my, Mr. Jarphly," said Mrs. Jarphly, snappishly and emphatically. "It was after 12 o'clock and I wasn't asleep."

"Why, Amanda, you're badly mistaken," responded Mr. Jarphly, in a conciliatory voice. "It wasn't more half after 12."

"Now, Jarphly, don't you sit there and falsify to me. I'm no fool, if you think I am."

"Amanda, I never said you was, you know I didn't. I only say you're mistaken, my dear, for it was only 11 o'clock or maybe twenty-five minutes to 12."

"Jarphly, wot's the use of your sitting there and lying? Don't you think I could see the clock?"

"Well, Amanda, I've got nothing more to say, if you'd rather believe a 35-cent nickel-plate nutmeg clock than your own married husband." Response: Mr. Jarphly, deeply injured.—New York Mail and Express.

What His Wife Told Him to Say.

Bob Lowder asked a wealthy old maid for her money. She quite herself up and makes quite a handsome appearance, at a number of balls and parties. On the other hand, Sam Chuzzlewit's wife is young and good-looking naturally. Both were in attendance at a ball on Austin avenue, and Mrs. Nickeler was painted thinner than ever. "Yes," responded Chuzzlewit, "and my wife looks that way yet."—Texas Siftings.

A Michigan Editor's Woe.

The Supreme Court of Michigan is now considering an appeal in the case of a newspaper, which has been carried in one direction, for it is unencumbered by such mere trifles that it will keep its enterprise in the publication of "all the news in the State. A man in Detroit was charged with murder, under peculiarly aggravated circumstances, and they broke the strong suspicions against him. The Detroit Free and Tribune declared with some earnestness that he was guilty of the crime. He was afterward tried and acquitted. He said the newspaper in question for libel, but the case went against him and in favor of the newspaper by lower courts. He appealed the case to the Supreme Court, which reversed the judgment in this case, and it now goes back for a new trial.

The opinion of Chief Justice Sprague in this case is far in advance of the age of libel. He said:

"The question in this case is, whether a man who is a public character, wood yards, ought to be libeled by his mistress in a pamphlet form, extolling the virtues of candidates; we take no notice of the fact that the newspaper in question, if it shall be inquired into, does not profess to have taken this course, we desire to illustrate weeklies showing the last days of the murderer, and the last days of the murdered, and the last days of the murdered, and the last days of the murdered

Temperance Reform.

WHAT HAS ALREADY BEEN ACCOMPLISHED —THE PROMISE OF THE FUTURE—THE POWER OF MORAL AND RELIGIOUS INFLUENCES.

No man who has lived forty or fifty years can fail, we think, to be impressed with the upward tendency of public sentiment with respect to temperance reform. Even those who are and total abstainers recognize the evil of the liquor traffic more clearly than in former years, and are glad to aid in suppressing its worst abuses. Our lawmakers are more ready to place restriction, of one kind or another, upon the business, and our judges are far less disposed to deal leniently with offenders against restrictive laws. And this public sentiment is not, as has sometimes been the case, the outburst of temporary enthusiasm but a steady outgrowth of solid conviction.

To be sure, dismal statistics may be cited on the other side. The amount of liquor manufactured and consumed is far greater now than ever before. Never were there so many distilleries in operation, and the number of breweries has increased enormously. Stated in gallons or reduced to "drinks," the aggregate of liquor consumed is appalling. But it must not be forgotten that the population of the country has also enormously increased. It is hardly possible to to grasp the idea of fifty odd millions of people; but a moment's thought will show how vast a quantity of liquor even one fiftieth of that number can consume in a year. Thus, while it is true that the manufacture and sale of spirituous liquors has greatly increased, it does not necessarily follow that the drinkers of intoxicating beverages bear the same proportion to the whole population as formerly. And when we consider that the swarms of emigrants constantly pressing in upon us consist largely of drinkers, we see where the enormous production of liquor is consumed.

Yet it would be sheer folly to ignore the tremendous power of the drinking habit as it still exists among us. The work to be done before the giant evil of intemperance is eradicated is unspeakably great. And the question forces itself upon every good citizen's attention: How can it best be done? Some, impatient of delay, would attempt to throttle the liquor traffic with an amendment to the national constitution. Others would seek the same end through state legislation, constitutional or statutory, while still others, distrusting the efficiency of the law to restrain men's appetites, look to moral and religious influences as insuring the largest and most permanent results in temperance reform. Whatever may be thought of other methods there at least all good people may be at one. The inculcation of total abstinence in our home family life, Sunday schools, from the pulpit, in the prayer meeting, and through special agencies devoted to temperance work, as well as by a consistent example, is a mode of advancing the reform in which every one may take a part. We have no disposition to oppose any earnest effort to further so beneficent a cause; but there is a choice of methods, and we see ground for special hope in the use of moral and religious agencies for persuading men to adopt strict temperance principles. The incalculable good that has been accomplished in the past by this means is the best possible proof of its value. In fact, we do not hesitate to affirm that for the cheering signs of progress in temperance reform of which we have spoken we are chiefly indebted to the quiet, patient, prayerful efforts of God-fearing men and women to reform the drinker and to make the drinking habit odious. Temperance legislation has had its part to play in the great work; but whatever efficiency it has had is due to the christian temperance sentiment behind it as a vivifying, sustaining force.—*N. Y. HER BUSY LIFE.

A Pen Portrait of the Late Frank Leslie's Attractive Widow.

A handsome woman sat before a big desk in a cosy office in Frank Leslie's publishing house, busily engaged over loose bills, writing letters, and attending to the details of the immense business. It was Mrs. Frank Leslie. She wrote gracefully and greeted the reporter cordially. Mrs. Leslie was plainly attired in a black dress with white trimmings. The only jewelry she wore consisted of a pair of neat pearl ear-drops. Her dark hair was tastefully arranged over her white forehead, and her large gray eyes sparkled with animation as she conversed.

"The public has been treated to so much of my private affairs," said Mrs. Leslie, "that I think it time to set people right. A few days ago a letter was published in a Chicago paper, and was extensively copied, giving what purported to be an account of my extravagant life at Long Branch. It stated that I had sixty-five different toilets while at the resort; that I drove five blooded horses upon the Concourse, and that my diamonds would fill a peck measure. The fact is that I was only at Long Branch for four days and that was the only time that I had been away from my business this season. I only wore three different toilets while there, and those were very plain, being either black or white. The fact is I have not worn any colors since Mr. Leslie's death. I drove a team occasionally, but it was not a blooded one, and I never owned five horses. My diamonds were only worn at a proper time and place, and are not conspicuous gems. Then the papers stated that my hotel bill for the four days was $450, while in fact it was but $39.50. I would not notice such gross exaggerations as these were it not for the fact that my business may be injured by such reports. I attend strictly to business and superintend the whole work of this great establishment. I am at my desk from early in the morning until late in the afternoon, and I do not know any lady that works harder than I.

"I noticed in a paper the other day that I kept a French maid to constantly wait upon me. This is false also, as I never had a maid of any kind, having a firm faith in the proverb that 'God helps those that help themselves.' I have always been treated with great consideration by the press of the United States, with few exceptions, and I am heartily grateful for it. But I suppose these attacks originate in the malice of some persons, although I never knowingly wronged any one."

Mrs. Leslie sighed, and the New York Journal reporter remarked: "The Marquis de Neuville has not always been treated with consideration by the press?"

"Oh, dear, no," said Mrs. Leslie. "The fact is, there is an antipathy to foreigners among the majority of Americans. The Marquis cannot help it because he was born with a title. He was even said when my engagement to him was first announced that his title was not genuine, but I believe every one acknowledges now that it is. For my part, I would prefer that he had no title, but it cannot be helped. The Marquis is a thorough gentleman, and the newspaper flings at his manner and personal appearance are fabrications. I never saw him wear a colored neck-tie in the four years that I have known him, and he always dresses in the most simple manner. It has never been claimed that he does not pay his debts, and he is one of the most charitable of men. No man ever applied to the Marquis to relieve his distress and was refused."

"When did you your marriage take place?"

"When that event takes place it will be as publicly announced as my engagement was," said Mrs. Leslie. "It is always painful to have one's private affairs brought before the public, but I believe they will appreciate the reasons which impel me to correct the false statements which have been put in circulation."

A Persian Spoon.

A sherbet spoon is from one to two feet in length; the bowl, cut from a solid block, holds from a quart glass to a tumbler of the liquid. This bowl is as thin as to be semi-transparent, and is frequently ornamented with an inscription, the letters of which are in high relief. To retain their semi-transparency, each letter is undercut, so that, although standing up an eighth of an inch from the surface of the bowl, yet the whole is of the same light and delicate texture, no part thicker than another. One-half of the surface of the spoon-bowl is covered by two cleverly applied pieces of carved wood, which appears to be carved from one block. But this is not the case—they are really cemented there. These pieces are carved in such a delicate manner as to be almost filmy in appearance, resembling fine lacework.

The handle of the spoon—at times twenty inches long—is formed in a separate piece, and inserted into the edge of the bowl in a groove cut to receive it. This handle is also elaborately carved in delicate tracery, and a wonderful effect is produced by the rhomboid-shaped handle, at times four inches broad at the widest part and only a tenth of an inch thick. The groove where the handle is inserted into the edge of the bowl of the spoon and the point of junction are hidden by a rosette of carvot wood, circular in shape, only a tenth of an inch thick. This, too, is carved in lace-like work, and it is cemented to the shaft of the spoon. A kind of flying buttress of similar delicate wood-work unites the back part of the shaft to the shoulder of the bowl.

The spoon which, when it leaves the carver's bench, is white, is varnished with Kaman oil, which acts as waterproof and preservative, and dyes the whole of a fine gamboge yellow similar to our boxwood. The weight of the spoon is in the largest sizes two ounces. The tools used by the carver are a plane, a rough sort of gouge, and a common penknife. Each spoon is of a separate and original design, no two being alike, save when ordered in pairs or sets. The price of the finest specimens is from 5 shillings to 15 shillings each.

These sherbet spoons are really works of art, and are valued by Oriental amateurs. Many of the merchants are very proud of their sherbet spoons, and being wood, they are "lawful," for a metal spoon, if of silver, is an abomination, consequently the teaspoons in Persia have a filigree hole in the bowl, and thus can be used for stirring the tea only, and not for the unlawful act of conveying it to the mouth in a silver spoon. Of course, these high-art sherbet spoons are only seen at the houses of the better classes, a coarser wooden spoon being used by the lower classes. The spoons at dinner serve as drinking vessels, for tumblers are unknown; and the metal drinking cups so much in use are merely for traveling or the pottle-deep potations of the irreligious.—Chambers' Journal.

A Henpecked Turk.

To tell the truth, a Turk is as badly henpecked as could well be imagined. The good old days when he could quietly strangle a refractory wife, and drop her into the Bosphorus to be buried at the State's expense, passed away a quarter of a century ago under the European spasm of virtue that established the "Joint control." Since then he has been too dejected to assert his power, and as a result the women do very much as they please. They stay in or go out, ramble about the thoroughfares alone, ride in the horse-cars or the caiques, gossip, study, read and frequent the baths much as if they had no lords and masters at all. But in point of fact there always has been a paradox in the rules of conduct laid down for Turkish women. The forced covering of their faces in the streets and the strictness in the rules of social intercourse throw a mystery around their treatment that has had much to do with making it seem severe. But on the other hand there is probably no nation in the world where the woman is so jealously guarded in her rights of life and property and so literally protected against her husband as in Turkey. It is considered quite the thing for a jealous Turk to go down to the old pier at Seraglio point and ruminate on his condition after the Marius-Carthago fashion. He doesn't expect to better his state thereby any more than to restore the half-suffocated masonry to its original condition, but it is quieter there than it is at home, and he gets a melancholy satisfaction in the recollection of the number of faithless spouses who have met their punishment from its edge.

Sitka Jack's Potlatch.

Sitka Jack's house is a large square one fronting directly on the beach, and during his absence at Tyrauid Harbor the square heartstone in the middle is kept warm by the relatives he has left behind him. When this house was built, in 1877, it was warmed by a grand potlatch or feast and gift distribution that distanced all previous efforts of any rivals. An Alaska chief is considered rich in proportion as he gives away his possession, and Sitka Jack rose an hundred-fold in Siwash esteem when he gave his grand potlatch. All his relatives assisted in building the house, and this same community idea entitles them to live in it. Over 500 blankets were given away at his grand potlatch, and the dance was followed by a great feast, in which much whisky and native hoochinoo flowed. Ben Holladay, Sr., with a large yachting party, was in the harbor at the time, and lent interest to the occasion by offering prizes for canoe races and adding a water carnival to the other festivities. Sitka Jack nearly beggared himself by his great spread but his fame was settled on a substantial basis, and he has since had time to partly recuperate. He has aged rapidly of late years, and now he delights to crouch by his fireside in winter evenings and relate the story of his great potlatch of seven years ago.

Red furniture in dull colors grows in favor almost daily, and faded rose and blue and olive pillow shams and curtain linings make a bed look like something quite different from the snowy couch of poetry, or from that later vision of the upholsterers, the bed with scarlet counterpane covered with lace. The new fashion is pretty and luxurious looking, and who can say that it is not fitting, in the days of Louis XV. chairs and costumes?

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

There was a glove fight at New York between Sullivan and Greenfield, in the second round both men were arrested and later bailed. The ring was an exhibition of scientific pugilism, and was awarded to Sullivan by the referee, principally because of the "clinching" tactics of Greenfield, who, however, put in many blows that could again upon his adversary's person.

The postoffice, six stores, and eleven houses at Patterson, Pa., valued at $40,000, were burned.

Julius Blank, of New York City, confessed of forgery regarding bonds in his election, has been sentenced to Sing Sing Prison for eighteen months. Emil Meyer, alias Godfrey, who stole bids, serves only a half year.

At Baltimore, Mr. Charles Leopold called upon Miss Hattie Winterbaum, offered his hand in marriage, and was accepted. Immediately remaining he then drew a pistol from his pocket. The weapon exploded while he was handling it, and the bullet fatally wounded Miss Winterbaum.

Forty coal miners, when arraigned at Washington, Pa., for interfering with non union workmen, made no defense, and were each fined 1 cent and costs.

A Grand Jury at New York indicted Sullivan and Greenfield for indulging in a prize-fight.

The Boston Base-Ball Association has been completed to purchase the South End grounds at $100,000, to prevent them from being cut up into building lots.

Daniel Manning, Chairman of the New York Democratic State Committee, was married at Albany to Miss Mary Margaretta Fryer. The public men of New York were well represented on the occasion, Gov. Cleveland being one of the throng. Mr. Manning and his bride immediately left for Europe.

A Cortlandville (N. H.) dispatch says the effects of the drought are seriously felt in many parts of that State. In several places sickness, due wholly to low wells, has occurred, and seems to be increasing. Scarlet fever and diphtheria exist in various towns. In several instances the schools are closed on account of the sickness of the people.

WESTERN.

The explosion of a barrel containing resin and turpentine, at No. 107 Quincy street, Chicago, severely burned Adam and Russell Poole, James Daley, Eddie and Maggie Bailey, Anna Wirtz, and Sadie Bassett, children living in the neighborhood. They were attempting to make a bonfire of the barrel, and some of them, it is thought, will die from their injuries.

The entire business portion of Huron, Kan., was reduced to ashes, the loss being $40,000.

Arrangements have been concluded between Zanesford and Shoreas for two billiard matches in Chicago in January.

Two tramps entered the house of a farmer named Dunlon, at Doylestown, Cook County, clubbed his wife to death, and fatally injured his young himself. Robbery was undoubtedly the subsequent motive, but if they secured was $25, owing to the manner description of their presence, no arrests have been or are likely to be made.

Three blocks of luminous houses at Hillsdale, D. T., burned, resulting in $150,000 loss, with about $20,000 insurance.

The Waukesha (Wis.) Woolen Mills were destroyed by fire, involving a loss of $75,000, twenty-five employes are thrown out of work.

The Continental Hotel at Fargo, Dak., took fire at 5 o'clock in the morning and was soon wholly consumed. The guests and servants were rescued. The loss is about $75,000.

For refusing to take out a license under the Dunning law sixty saloonkeepers at St. Joseph, Mo., were fined $200 each, and will not be given a license for two years. A number of similar cases are pending, and the decision has caused consternation.

So virulent is the hog cholera in Iowa that the recent losses in Mills County alone are estimated at $11,000.

Undismayed by past failures, the Friends of the Hennepin Canal project will make a vigorous effort in the Forty-ninth Congress to secure the necessary aid for this important work. As preliminary to this end, the commission has been reorganized and new officers elected for the ensuing year.

In the business office of the San Francisco Chronicle, Adolph Spreckels and Michael H. De Young, the proprietor of the paper. A San Francisco dispatch gives the following part owners of the office:

De Young had been not purchasing some time, and has gone down Kearny street and opened the business office of the paper and issued tickets in his private office for sale on the coverage, with the intention of going home, and a moment later he came out with the knife and the firm to see something in one hand and a pistol in the other. He ran down the sidewalk, the setting, head down and bailed his way in good order. Mr. De Young, I want to see you." De Young turned partly around to see who spoke, and saw young Spreckels standing within three feet of him. Before De Young had time to say a word, Spreckels fired the pistol at his head, and the ball struck him in the left temple. De Young, who was unarmed, sought shelter behind a hack office clerk. Spreckels sprang toward the carriage, and, beating over, fired again. This shot struck De Young in the left side of the face, turned with the blood of a stabbing victim in the hand of Spreckels, who ran to the office and fell, possibly on the floor. Spreckels then made another rush toward him, and, drawing a slightly down, fired a third shot. The bullet struck one of the children's backs and lodged in the spinal column. The boy was shot off without doing him injury. One of the advertisers' clerks picked up a revolver lying in a desk drawer near by and fired at Spreckels. The movements of the latter were so rapid that he missed his aim, which was intended for Spreckels. Spreckels ran to the office of the Chronicle, telling wounded. All the employes then made a rush for the assassin. Chasey, the cashier, happened to be nearest to him. He grabbed Spreckels' revolver, and with a violent twist turned it upward. Spreckels struggled, but Chasey he could the further hours was overpowered. The wounded men were taken to Dr. Dwyer, who, who, who, Dr. Young's wounds are not dangerous.

SOUTHERN.

By the action of the Supreme Court of the United States, the decision of the Virginia Court of Appeals enforcing the Mutual Assurance Society of Virginia from liability for loss by fire on certain Richmond property consumed at the time of the capture in 1865, on the ground that the fire was the result of "the invasion of a foreign enemy," is allowed to stand for want of jurisdiction on the part of the higher court. The decision of this test case relieves the underwriters generally from liability for a great quantity of property destroyed by fire in Richmond when that city was evacuated to the rebels.

A negro named Isaac Johnson was executed at Canton, Miss., for the murder of a negress named Belle Brooker, in April last. The doomed man made a short speech from the gallows, declaring that his sins were forgiven and his belief that his soul would be saved. He confessed his guilt.

One man was killed, several people injured, and the peasantry are reported moving as a result of the explosion of the steamer Grand Tom, on Bayou Bodeau.

A freight train on the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific Road was wrecked near Bayville, La. Four tramps are reported to have been killed.

In Marshal County, Alabama, Robert Howard, a young farmer, went to James Peake's house to settle an old grudge. Peake disclaimed his purpose and shot Howard through the abdomen, but the latter, rallying himself with an effort, shot Peake dead. Mrs. Peake then rushed upon Howard, but met the same fate meted out to her husband. When neighbors arrived all three were found to be dead.

WASHINGTON.

The State Department has instructed its consuls at London and Paris to appoint medical examiners to inspect all vessels leaving England or French ports for this country, with a view to preventing the spreading of cholera.

Last week's issue of standard silver dollars amounted to $438,000, against $385,000 for the corresponding week in 1885.

Two members of the Swain committee—Paymaster General Rodgers and Gen. Terry—were dropped on the strength of the defendant's objection that they were not impartial judges, and could not, therefore, sit in trial. A similar objection was urged against Commodore Jenkins, but was ruled.

Postmaster General Hatton has instructed the chief clerk to issue a news letter to aid the postmaster in inspection of vessels leaving England or French ports for this country, with a view to preventing the spreading of cholera.

Last week's issue of standard silver dollars amounted to $438,000, against $385,000 for the corresponding week in 1885.

Admiral Porter recommends that the unfinished monitors be completed as ram, and that three heavy monitors of great speed, twenty torpedo boats, and one cruising iron clad be built.

President Arthur announces that he will make no appointments before the close of his term except in cases of vacancies.

POLITICAL.

James G. Blaine was serenaded at his home in Augusta, Me., by his social and political friends, and made a short address, thanking the Republicans of the country for their endorsement, and expressing hope for the future. He deprecated the predominating power of the South in the formation of administration, saying that, while the Gulf States have given electoral representation for all citizens of all race, still the negro suffrage was suppressed, and the white party wielded a double force, and virtually possessed two votes for the one enjoyed by the Northern citizens. He also had nothing but good-will for the President-elect, and trusted that his administration would redound to the best interests of the nation.

A Lansing dispatch says that official returns from all but five counties in Michigan, which are carefully estimated, give Republican majorities as follows: Blaine, 1,638; Alger, for Governor, 3,396; Salmon of State ticket, 1,360. The Legislature is Republican in both branches by a big majority.

Complete unofficial returns from fourteen counties of Nevada show the following results: Blaine, 1,664; Woodburn, Republican, for Congress, 526; Hawley, Republican, for Supreme Judge, 498.

The official count for President in Alabama is as follows: Cleveland, 92,975; Blaine, 56,418; Binns, 562; St. John, 846.

The Legislature of Georgia re-elected Joseph E. Brown to the United States Senate with but one dissenting vote.

It is claimed that Senator Riddleberger, of Virginia, who long ago left Mahone's company, will hereafter march with the Democratic forces.

St. John's vote in his own State is exceedingly small, only 846 out of a total vote of over 210,000.

Dr. William Perry, of Exeter, N. H., the oldest living graduate of Harvard, voted for Cleveland.

A Humanitonic, Mass., man wagered his guarantee and lost. His grave will be unmarked.

Senator Edmunds is said not only to contemplate the thought of a democratic victory with equanimity, but actually to feel happy in the belief that he assisted in Blaine's defeat.

Mr. Carlisle will be a candidate for re-election to the Speakership. Of the two elected Democrats, 66 voted for Carlisle in the caucus, 26 for Randall, and 15 for Cox.

Blaine has 3,600 more votes in New York State than Cleveland had, but Cleveland increased Hubbard's vote and his own in 1882 by 26,000.

Senator Cameron, of Wisconsin, is on a continuous free-vacation.

Under the present Vermont law a citizen votes wherever he happens to be on election day. Thus, Senator Edmunds, during a flying trip from Washington, deposited his ballot at the 12-0 national station in Vermont, which has proved to be Brattleboro, instead of going on to his home, Burlington.

President-elect Cleveland, in an interview with a staff correspondent of the Baltimore American, is represented as saying that in view of his small majority no one man or faction of men can claim to have elected him, and that he accordingly owes no one man more than he owes another. He further informed the correspondent that he "expected to be pretty tired" at Washington, but, alluding to the current talk of a "clean sweep," remarked that he wasn't much of a "chopper."

At Chambersburg, Pa., Luther Cattan, over 100 years old, cast his twenty-fourth consecutive vote. A longer time than twenty-four years he has not attended any election. He walked from his home, and counted him to the polls, headed by the Mentzer Cornet Band. In the same marriage with the centenarian rode Julius, his son, aged 72 years; Henry Cattan, his grandson, aged 52 years; and Charles Keeter, his great grandson, aged 21 years. All voted for Blaine.

The official majority for Cleveland in West Virginia is 4,280.

Complete returns from Michigan show a plurality for Blaine of 2,525. The St. John vote is 16,164.

It is stated that of Minnesota, Blaine 111,732, Cleveland, 76,111; St. John, 4,891; Butler, 3,587.

It is stated that the alleged shortage of the Republican National Committee reached $80,000, instead of the much larger sum at first reported, and that Chairman Jones and Mr. Elkins paid it out of their own pockets and put the committee out of debt.

MISCELLANEOUS.

It is understood that a favorable understanding has been arrived at between Sir Alexander Campbell, representing the Dominion of Canada, and the Hon. Mr. Mowat, Premier of Ontario, as to the best steps to be taken for expropriating the lands on the Canada side of the Niagara River between Suspension Bridge and the streets and islands adjacent to be set apart as the Niagara portion of the Imperial and Para, and that the execution of the scheme will not be long delayed.

Baltimore and Ohio earnings during the last year were $15,000,000, and the ability thus to the surplus, after paying the usual annual dividend of 10 per cent., nearly $2,000,000.

Revolutionary outbreaks are reported in Nuevo Leon and Coahuila, Mexico, and a general, with troops to support the revolt, has revolted Lampasas.

Father Egan, of Thorhill, Ontario, saw fit to nail a board across a pew in his church, rented by Dugald McIntyre. A struggle ensued at the commencement of the services, last Sunday, and the priest dragged the old man to the door and threw him with such force as to fracture his thigh.

In Rupert Land a Canadian expedition discovered Lake Mistassini, which is twice as large as the Lake of Geneva, and very picturesque. Fur-bearing animals abound on its shores, and fish are very abundant. It is believed that the Hudson Bay Company has known of the existence of the lake for a hundred years, but kept the matter secret.

FOREIGN.

The recent death of Baron Alexander von Stieglitz, the head of the firm of St. Petersburg, is chronicled. He left $75,000,000 to relatives and employes, including the gift of the Fatherlaff Railway to Baron Polskoyen.

The American and English residents of Paris have associated to insist their country, and for the establishing of soup kitchens. They say there is no need of four francs the dinner, and the soup kitchens would be the weak, intemperate and nervous to leave the city.

A committee of the French Chamber of Deputies has reported in favor of the abolition of life Senatorships.

In the review of the British grain trade, the Mark Lane Express says: "There were large imports of wheat last week from America. The trade is still depressed, and very little business is being transacted from foreign sources."

At a caucus of the Conservative members of the English Parliament it was decided to accept the Government's offer of compromise and to pass the franchise bill, provided that the Government will at once promulgate a redistribution bill which shall be satisfactory to both parties.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

Maurice Desprez, a native of France, has just died in Chicago, at the ripe age of 103 years.

David Eastman, a farmer at Harlem, Winnebago County, Ill., loses his farm and house, worth $3,000, having wagered a mortgage that Blaine would be elected.

Over 10,000 Scandinavians from Chicago, St. Paul, and all parts of the Northwest, set out for Chicago, the other day, by the thousand, from Rand on an extended tour, to the Dakotas, Minnesota.

John L. Hiller, of Des Moines, Iowa, last week paid an elevator in Minneapolis, which was to wheel a colored woman eight blocks, a wheelbarrow was arranged with its passenger, and banners and band brought out, the middle of the hammer was "Ward for Ward," and on the other, "To win is well; to lose is hell." When everything was ready, Mr. Baker, wearing the Blaine hat, stepped to the front and performed the task. It produced amusement for a large crowd.

The strange disease reported as prevailing in Virginia also exists in Kentucky and West Virginia, where whole families have been swept away, and forty or more new graves are seen in a small cemetery. The people call it cholera, for want of a better name, and the malady holds the beaten for days, victims, upon being seized, will sometimes live but a few hours, or a week. It is said the scourge affected mulattoes in some precincts at the recent election. Appeals are made for aid to prevent the spread of the disease from the decaying carcasses of animals, potatoes, the air. Flour, corn, and meal are needed to succor the starving population, and, secure rain falls, annihilating may be anticipated.

At Dubuque, Iowa, Judge Utt, of the circuit Court, rendered a decision, under the new prohibitory law, in favor of the liquor men. Nineteen saloon keepers were sued by the Citizens' League, bonded by J. J. Parker. They asked the court for an injunction to close the saloons as criminal nuisances under the law. Judge Utt sustains a demurrer of the defendants on the grounds that this court, being one of equity, has no jurisdiction over a criminal case, and on the general grounds that it is unconstitutional to deprive a man of his property. The decision is received with great interest, being regarded as a prohibition defeat. An appeal will be made.

It is stated that the total amount of money received by the Democratic National Committee during the late campaign was $340,000, of which $75,000 was realized through the popular campaign fund in sums of less than $500.

The Portoffice Department reports a quite general backwarding postmasters in the Southern States, who have hitherto been the case exchanges of administration. The fact is said out that they should not assume jurisdiction on the partial a democratic Postmaster General.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

NEARLY three thousand persons languish in Italian convict prisons under sentences of penal servitude for life. In the annual budget 33,000,000 francs are set aside for the expenses of these establishments, while only 22,000,000 francs are spent upon education.

A HANDSOME income is made by a Frenchman at Berlin, who has introduced the Parisian system of window cleaning by contract. He charges two shillings a month, and has 6,000 customers in the German capital alone, where he employs forty men.

MISS MARY ELIZABETH GARNETT, the daughter of the late John W. Garrett, of Baltimore, is now said to be the richest unmarried lady in this country. The estimates of her father's wealth range from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000, and of this she receives a third.

FORTY THOUSAND people are employed in making watches and clocks in Switzerland. The average annual production of watches is 1,500,000. The latest novelty in this line is a watch that indicates the time in other countries and places, such as Paris, Sooz, Bombay, New York, and San Francisco.

IN a mound supposed to have been the tomb of a mound-builder, opened in Lake County, W. Va., last week, a necklace made of the teeth of a wolf was found in a good state of preservation. Also a shuttle made like those now in use; and a pair of earrings of copper, rolled or hammered into thin plates and stamped into concave and convex ridges or rings.

R. J. BURDETTE has written an epic on a baby consisting of one stanza. Here it is:

He's come where he'll have to scratch for his grub,
And teach out for everything he gets;
He's come where he'll have to scratch for his grub,
And he'll get shaken up when he gets.
And he'll get shaken up when he gets,
He'll have his mettle tested when he first learns to crawl,
Yes he'll have to get it down when he walks
Yes he'll have to get it down when he walks.

SEVERAL students of the institute at Worcester, Mass., have recently smuggled a horse up two winding stairs into the chapel room. When the faculty and students assembled the next morning for prayer there were very few to join in the prayer, which followed. The professors were considerably baffled in their efforts to get rid of the intruder, and after working nearly an hour and a whole day to get the animal out, they tried a number of men, who tied the horse's feet together, and carried him down the stairs in blankets, and slid him down the stairs on skids.

THE sandwich man advertisement is little used here, though in London it is the great, and, I think, the only method of moving along the Strand, disguised in antique armor and adulterated gin, firing the public by his glittering helmet and blinding coat of mail, to come to see "Chatterbox," or again he shuffles along the curb at Cheapside in the disorder hat and gown of the morbidly nurse, bearing a dummy infant on each arm, and reminding man and womankind that the "Twins" is in full season at the Olympic, or "The Babies" bends the programme at Toole's. We have scarcely reached this delicate perfection yet.

A BI-TAROOD son of Roger S. Austin, of Wallingford, Conn., wrapped wrested around the head of a pin, and fired it through a blow pipe at various objects with more or less success. At last he sucked it back into his throat. Sixteen doctors tried to get it out and failed, and the boy was sent to the New York Hospital, where the operation of tracheotomy was successfully performed, but the boy died soon after, because it had gone too far to be reached with any of the usual instruments. They kept the boy alive, however, while a special instrument was made at Philadelphia, and when it arrived they captured the pin. The boy returned to his home, after having been nearer death than he is likely to be again until his end actually comes.

PHILADELPHIA has an organization which has for years supplied coal to poor people at wholesale rates or even less. It is called the Coal Saving Society, and one of its objects is to induce the industrious and worthy poor to practice habits of economy and saving. Heads of families who wish to profit by this society are requested to put by something during the summer with which to purchase in the winter. No larger sum than one dollar is received by agents of the society at any one time, and no family will be allowed to deposit more than the price of three tons in a season. Deposits are not received from those whose circumstances will permit them to purchase fuel outright, nor from those who keep coal for sale, nor from saloon-keepers. Deposits are received from March until September, the entire fund then being used for the purchasing of coal by wholesale. Many families are supplied in this way who might otherwise have needed charitable aid, and the result is altogether beneficial.

THE Assay Office in New York purchases punched coin in sums of $100, but not a less amount. The price paid is just what the silver comes to in the coin, less 1 per cent. It is said that a great deal of punched coin comes from the West Indies, where the same objection to receiving it does not exist elsewhere. The device of filling the holes with lead is a poor one. If the lead is scraped bright, one might be deceived in the dark, but the fraud is easily found out if one looks closely. Other ways of tampering with coin are to file it or bore into the edges or sweat it. This last is usually done to gold coin, and is simply shaking it in a bag to get the gold dust that comes off.

IT is one of the odd facts associated with the woman question that a Chinese champion has thrown down his gloves in behalf of the women of China. Col. Tcheng, military attache to the Chinese Embassy in Paris, asserts in the Revue des Deux Mondes that the condition of women in China is preferable to that of their sex in Europe. The bold champion seems to think that Europeans are really "outside barbarians" in their treatment of women. He says marriages are less wisely arranged in Europe than in China, where marriages for money are wholly unknown. As a consequence, divorces are rare, and happy homes are common. The wife in China devotes herself to the education of her children. She has more power over them, and over her own property, than a European wife has, but is regard to the small feet of Chinese women, he says: "The Chinese woman walks as well as you can, if she runs even with her small feet. She runs at pleasure, takes walks in her sedan chair, and has not even a veil to prevent her from taking cigarettes." The Colonel is a bold man to assert in Paris the superiority of his countrywomen to the women of France, but he does make several palpable hits.

THE total quantity of butchers' meat consumed in Paris, last year, was about 127,000 tons, while 20,000 tons of poultry and game were sold during the same period. The price of poultry has increased very much during the last few years, and game, the wholesale price of which was rather less than 3f. in 1870, were last year over 5f. The wholesale price of ducks has gone up during the past ten years from 2f. 75c. to 4f., rabbits from 1f. 95c. to 3f. 50c., partridges from 2f. 10c. to 2f. 80c., and hares from 3f. 35c. to 6f. Pheasants upon the other hand, have slightly fallen in price, from 6f. 90c. in 1873 to 6f. 25c. Most of the poultry and game consumed in Paris comes from the provinces, but 1,200,000 pigeons, 40,000 quails, 21,000 larkeys, and 20,000 fowls come from Italy; 250,000 hares, 11,000 deer, and 200 wild boars from Germany; and a great number of partridges, woodcock, and snipe from Spain. Most of the game and poultry consumed as stuff for food had been sold, according to the report published by the inspector of markets, by the railway companies, and this is accounted for by so many boxes of game and poultry being unclaimed or having had their addresses rubbed off. The contents are then sold, and, as may be imagined, they are generally very "high." The consumption of fish last year was about 22,000 tons, or 1,000 tons more than in 1882, and nearly a fourth of the whole were herrings, sold at an average wholesale price of 3 pence per pound. About a fourth of the whole supply of fish came from abroad, chiefly from England. This is exclusive of oysters, the consumption of which is reckoned at 5,275 tons, and it is worthy of note that the price of them is nearly 50 per cent. less than it was ten years ago. The consumption of butter in Paris last year was 17,000 tons, of cheese 5,600 tons, and of eggs 40,000,000 dozen.

AT YORKTOWN.

An Ex-Confederate's Recollections of Life and Death in the Trenches.

Ah! who that lived in the parti-fighted therein can ever forget the misery endured in that memorable siege? The line of intrenchments of the defense between the two rivers, the York and the James, was perhaps four or five miles long; and there was not a spot of ground in the four for a mile that was not constantly searched by the cannon shot and rifle balls of the Federals. As the months then present wore and more than sufficient to mass the broad works in case of a sudden attack, and one was expected momentarily, it was necessary to have the regiments within easy reach. There were no such things as hills and hollows in that cool-breaken country, it is as flat as a billiard-table; and to have encamped the troops on open ground would have subjected them to a certain loss that would have been criminal on the part of the General. Thus, then of the regiments had in the trenches were compelled to huddle in the bomb-proofs just behind them; and, if laid has any weary of entire was experienced by the men in these bomb-proofs, then I want to put the church immediately.

Dark, fathomless, without ventilation, swarming with vermin, the fumes of rage, spirit shake, covered with two feet of earth, and sometimes half submerged in the great rest for a moment, even from overstrained nature gives way, and the sensitive one sinks. Added to this the dews were so crowded at all times, that it was difficult to find a place to set down, much less to recline. It was with our rainy, dark nights, when the crackle of the sharpshooters ceased for a while and only an occasional cannon shot crashed through the broadwood, that the fortrmed troops could venture out to breathe the freshier air. This misery continued for a week at a time before a relief was sent; and during that time the men had not one moment of warm food or a drop of warm drink, for all the cooking had to be done two miles in the rear, and it was strictly forbidden to light a fire in or near the trenches. Numbers were prostrated with chills and fever and other forms of malarial disease, and I remember to report that on several occasions during the parapetted experience in those cold holes in the ground men rushed out in a frenzy, preferring instant death to the slow torture and misery they generally if what they sought for.

There was some of the finest sharpshooting done in that siege that the world has developed. It was said—I know not with what truth—that the Federal side there were a number of Sharpsburg men, and, if this be true, getting tired of shooting Rebs in Maryland, but come over "to take a pot-shot at the Yankees." This was a large dead tree, situated fully 1,000 yards from the Confederate trenches, and among its limbs, nearly or quite 40 feet from the ground, a Federal sharpshooter had built a platform of impregnable size, so to speak. His view of the rear of the Confederate works was continued to a great extent, on account of pitting points of woods, and it was almost certain death for a man to walk slowly across that space. Everybody who had seen it passed it on a run. One day some sharpshooters of the Seventeenth Virginia Infantry were set to work to dig a trench way across this fatal spot, and, forgetting themselves, rested for a moment, but exposed to the side of the ditch, instantly Mr. Sharpshooter got in his work by clipping the heel of one and nearly wounding another with one bullet. Every means was tried to get rid of the nuisance, even to training a rifled battery on him; but it has been reported that behind them; and, if laid has any weary of entire was experienced by the men in these bomb-proofs, then I want to put the church immediately.

The Financial Outlook.

The fact that a considerable number of mills and factories have recently shut down has given the habitual croakers an opportunity to renew their gloomy prognostications as to the future. The scheme does not seem to work well, and in business circles there is apparently a disposition to take a more hopeful view of the general financial and commercial situation. It is well known that the temporary shutting down by manufacturers and the reduction in wages are both the result of past events rather than of any new developments in the business affairs of the country. Over-production of metals, coal, cotton manufactures, etc., etc., a few years since naturally brought about extremely low prices, and with a decrease in all directions to curtail consumption to pressing wants, there has been more or less depression in all branches of trade. The movement looking towards reduced wages will not, it is confidently believed, cause any uprising of labor for the reason that the necessaries of life are now obtainable more cheaply than for many years. These concomitants of the situation will ultimately correct many evils, and will, in connection with other causes now appearing, assist in building up trade in various channels.

Since the election there has been a substantial improvement in the dry goods business and the distributive movement has increased materially. In this and in other branches there is an impression that bed-rock prices have been touched, and that delay in making purchases may only result in having to pay higher figures. When this view becomes general there will be witnessed an improvement similar to that noticed in the department of dry goods. The success of the democratic party has already inspired confidence among the mercantile classes and the future is looked forward to with cheerfulness, it being believed that legislation will be so shaped as to bring lasting benefits to the business interests. The recent utterances of President-elect Cleveland and Mr. Hendricks are calculated to stimulate this feeling of confidence, and to impart fresh courage to those about to embark in new enterprises. The outlook is certainly more favorable and the shutting down of mills in consequence of troubles dating back several years will soon give place to a more healthy and satisfactory condition of affairs.—New York World.

"The Coming Great Change."

Under the above caption, Mr. J. S. Moore writes at length in the New York Times of Nov. 18th, discussing the election of Grover Cleveland, and the probable influence it will have on the government, on the tariff, and on business generally. We make a brief extract.

Yes: the boss power is at last broken, and it will indeed be strange if the turning millions do not benefit by the change. The money power has also received a wholesome check, and the will of the people has triumphed. There is nothing more benevolent in a country like America, whose greatness and prosperity rests largely on capital, than the power of wealth properly exercised. But when immense wealth is concentrated in a few hands, and its great influence is used as a pressure upon the ruling power, then it becomes a brake and subverts the liberty of the people. During the campaign just ended, evidence of arrogance has been given by the representatives of enormous wealth unknown, or, if known, which intimated that the government would be best represented by the plutocracy of the country. It was indeed humiliating enough when charges were made and not refuted that the highest privilege of this great country—should be purchased for the chief purpose of adding to wealth a monopoly. And the golden banquet gave occasion to the assumption that the mighty Julius was about to become a ruler in full earnest. But the people rose in their might and dashed these hopes to pieces.

He says the chances for tariff reform have taken a new and favorable departure. The statement that tariff reformers wish to agitate or even raise at free trade, pure and simple, is false. The supposition that tariff reform means a sudden destruction of industries in which thousands of people have embarked under an erroneous system is without the slightest foundation. Tariff reform aims at free raw material, a large reduction of taxation on the commonest necessaries of life, a high rate of duty on wine, spirits, tobacco, cigars, and perfumery, and a great reduction of such gigantic tariff swindles as the duty of 80 per cent on window glass, 125 per cent on plate glass, 100 per cent on varnish, and hundreds more of such articles.

Of the prospective changes in the Federal offices, Mr. Moore says:

If the journals who are proved to indulge in the surmise that 100,000 officials will be dismissed would endeavor to get rid of the last crop of malice and campaign slander, they would insure the much frightened and disturbed officials that it is rather the mission of president-elect Cleveland to uphold the civil service system than to destroy it. My advice to the thousands of officials now in the service is to perform their duties faithfully, to give the robbers and blackmailers over to justice, as the law provides, and to refrain from needless alarms, and hope politics for a while to take care of itself. By so doing they will render not only good service to the country, but to their own personal interests. In my opinion, it would indeed be a political blunder, which is worse than a crime, to dismiss worthy officials who have shown ability and integrity for no other reason than their political faith.

Book Notices.

The Book-Worm.

A unique, handsome, and delightfully readable little Monthly Magazine, containing for the price of over 300 pages and many fine pictures, all for 25 cents a year, is a recent characteristic product of The Literary Revolution. Each number contains attractive selections from some noted book, either the present President's famous chapters on the "Spanish Inquisition," "What will interest a young number of book-lovers will be the regular monthly news of the Revolution's progress, an enterprise that has wrought wonders in the book world. A specimen copy of The Book Worm will be sent free to any address. John B. Alden, publisher, 393 Pearl street, New York.

Alden's Literary Revolution.

John B. Alden's Literary Revolution, though possibly not making so large a "noise" in the world as three or four years ago when its remarkable work was new to the public, is really making more substantial progress than ever before. A noticeable item is the improved quality of the books issued. Cotter's Famous "History of France," not sold till recently for much less than $20, is put forth in eight small octavo volumes, ranking with the handsomest ever issued from American printing presses, including the 40 full page original illustrations, and is sold for $7.00. Bawlinson's celebrated "Seven Great Monarchies of the Ancient Eastern World," is produced in elegant form, with all the maps and illustrations, reduced in price from $18 to $7.75. These are but representative of an immense list of standard works, ranging in price from two cents to nearly $200, which are set forth in a descriptive catalogue of 100 pages, and which is sent free to every applicant. It certainly is worth the cost of a postal card to the publisher, John B. Alden, 393 Pearl street, New York.

The Cottage Hearth.

The December number of the Cottage Hearth is received. It opens with a well-written biographical article of Mrs. Frances L. Mace, accompanied by a fine portrait of the lady author, remarkably popular in her trade as the writer of "Only Waiting," as well as many other poems appealing to our better nature and life. "What they brought home from the Fair," is a laughable story of the adventures of a good-hearted country couple at the Institute Fair in Boston. Mrs. Flansburgh on Flowers, Mrs. Tutton's technical receipts, and the other well-known departments of this fine home magazine, are as usual, timely, practical, and helpful to every one interested in making home the pleasantest spot on earth. The publishers announce that during the coming year they shall not only strive in every way to make the magazine more attractive in its illustrations and mechanical work, but continue their well-tried and long-tested policy of making the Cottage Hearth the standard magazine in its peculiar field of home life. We have made such arrangements that we can offer this magazine and the JOURNAL to new subscribers for only $2. Write to Cottage Hearth Co., Boston, for Free sample copy, and see for yourself how much reading we offer for a little money.

Bohemian Corpse-Boards.

When anyone dies, man or woman, the corpse is removed from the death-bed and laid on a board previously cut and prepared to receive it. At the head is a sort of pent-roof, slow gabley lower down; is a bar across for the seat, and a little shelf at the bottom for the feet. On this the corpse reposes until the funeral. After this, the painting of the board is completed, the inscription filled up; it is then nailed or screwed to a stout post, which is driven into the ground by the mandais, so that the "corpse-board" stands upright till the post rots and allows it to fall, when it crumbles unnoticed into the soil. The entrance to a village is through an avenue of these horrible memorials. Sometimes, however, they are planted in the depth of the wood, where roads fork—beside mere paths in the most lonesome spots. As they advance in age they decline more and more from the perpendicular and lurch to right and left. In the evening glimmering, the appearance of a row of these is just that of a line of they soldiers. This effect is enhanced by the peculiarity of their ornamentations. At the head, under the weatherboard, where round the head of the corpse, is painted a round white disk, which is adorned with figures of the virgin and a saint in the sky, or the trinity, and in the middle is the deceased, kneeling very upright in his best Sunday clothes. Another variety is a stock-face with the mandais polishing to the hour of death. Further down is a tablet, or a pair of tablets, on which are inscribed the name, age, and merits of the departed, and some verses of more or less originality and merit.—Cornhill Magazine.

An Arkansas man thinks he has exhumed the petrified head of a fairy. The supposed fossil is about the size of a large walnut. The features of the human face—eyes, nose, mouth, forehead, cheeks and chin—may all be discerned.

WIT AND HUMOR.

Many young men from the country are ruined in large cities. They fall into the habit of wearing tight boots and are crippled for life.

We are told, "No two after-dinner coffee-cups should be the same." After a set has been handled by the hired girl any length of time they are not the same, either.

A young theologian preached before the assembled classes of a female college. In his opening prayer he cried out: "O Lord, kindle a flame of love in our hearts, and, O Lord, water it—water it."—Life.

"Two girls and a merchant have disappeared from the town during the past three months, and have not been heard from since," says a dispatch from Clarington, Ohio. If the trio were together Utah should be searched.

"Mr. Jones," said little Johnny to that gentleman, who was making an afternoon call, "can wakey talk?" "No, my child; however can you ask such a question?" "O, nothing! only mamma whisky was beginning to tell on you."

They now fill teeth with electricity. A woman with a tooth full of electricity and an eye full of fire will be a balmy object for a man to meet on the top landing when he comes home from attending his books at 2 a. m.—Pittsburg Chronicle.

Ladies are informed by a fashion writer that it will be entirely proper during the coming season for them to stand up in the street cars, as pinnacks will be so tight in the Autumn dresses that sitting down will be uncomfortable, as well as almost impossible.—Cincinnati Leader.

"Going out with your bride to select your tableware, are you?" "Well, young man, let me give you a hint. Buy light cups and small plates. Many a man and wife have been seriously injured in a dispute by big plates." And old Mr. Budger chuckled and rubbed his head and the happy couple passed on.

"So you went to the circus, Mary?" "Oh! yes, and enjoyed myself very much." "Did you see the kangaroo in the menagerie?" "I did, and felt sorry for it. Poor thing, it is dying, isn't it?" "Why, no. What put that into you head?" "The way it acted. When I saw it it seemed to be on its last legs."

A tramp stopped at a house on Main street the other day and asked for something to eat. "Which do you like best," asked the hired girl, "steak or chop?" The tramp hesitated a moment, and then replied, "Chop." "Step right this way," said the girl, "there's the ax and there's the wood pile."—Beaver Falls Gazette.

"Molly, I wish you would be a better little girl," said an Austin father to his little daughter. "You have no idea how sorry I am that mamma has to scold you all the time." "Don't worry about it, pa," was the reply of the little angel; "I am not one of those sensitive children. Half the time I don't hear what she says."—Texas Siftings.

A lady living in Chelsea employs a girl named Bridget to take care of her youngest child, a two-year-old boy named Freddy. During the recent unprecedented rainy spell in Austin, Mrs. Jones sent her servant to a neighbor, Mrs. Smith, with the following message: "Would you be kind enough to send back that umbrella you borrowed about a month ago from Mrs. Jones." "Certainly, here it is. Tell Mrs. Jones that I would have sent it back sooner, but it has been raining ever since I borrowed it."—Texas Siftings.

"Has he gone, dear?" "Yes, grandma." "And what was that sound in the hall, Jessie?" "Why, it must have been the door shutting, grandma." "Your grandma may be old and deaf, Jessie, but doors did not slam with a sound like that when she was a girl." "Did the men wear mustaches then, grandma?" "No, my dear." "Well, that makes the difference probably."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

"Wall," said the bootblack who sat next to the alley, and who had been keeping very quiet for a long time, "my gal sits stylish nor handsome, and she hasn't got small feet nor a Grecian nose, but she's awful good-hearted." "How good?" asked the one who carried three cigar stands in his next pocket. "Well, the other night when I'd been eating onions and she hadn't, she rubbed limburger cheese all over her mouth so as not to make me feel embarrassed."—Detroit Free Press.

A young man in Sinshan, N. Y., fell deeply in love with a young lady of Hoosick Falls. She, alas! did not reciprocate. What did the young man do? Did he mope around, and get thin, and reduce his father's next bill ten per cent? Not he; he went and set the girl's father's house on fire and then saved her from the flames. Success rewarded his bravery and devotion, and now he is hard at work helping the old gentleman build another shanty.—Burlington Free Press.

A blushing young man called upon a Madison Avenue florist, one day last week, and gave the proprietor $46 to construct a bouquet which would say, in floral language "Dearest one, I love you—be mine," and which was to be delivered that evening, without fail, at the residence of a beautiful, accomplished, and unfurnished girl on Thirty-sixth street. It evidently was delivered, because at an early hour next morning the young lady called at the same florist and tweaked $2.75 in a bouquet, conveying the message: "No, you baudy-legged clam."—New York Star.

A woman is far more sensitive than a man. She has finer feelings and a more delicate mind. There are a very few men who realize this, and in consequence woman is made to endure much unnecessary suffering. One of our merchants was going to church with his wife on Sunday morning, when she suddenly stopped and put her hand to her head. "What's the matter?" he asked, startled by the look on her face. "Oh! I have got on my brown hat." "Fa!" ejaculated the astonished man. She burst into tears. "What, Martha, what is the matter with you?" he demanded. "Don't you see what is the matter?" she returned in a sobbing voice. "I've got on my brown hat with my striped silk. Oh, what will people say?"—Danbury News.

At rare intervals, our skies still show something of the peculiar redness which characterized them last winter. There seems no reasonable doubt, now, that this was (and is) due to volcanic dust coming from the bursting of bubbles (of molten metal) thrown out at Krakatoa. Samples of this dust have been examined microscopically by many students, and there seems no limit to the fineness of division; the higher the power of the lenses the greater the number of particles seen. The violence of the explosions is deemed sufficient to have filled the air with dust to very great altitudes. Its long suspension there would be insured not only by its extreme fineness but by its electrical state.—New York Hour.

IT IS CLEVELAND.

The Great Presidential Contest of 1884 Brought to an End.

The Official Count in New York Shows a Plurality for Cleveland.

Mr. Blaine Discusses the Causes of His Defeat—Gov. Cleveland Interviewed.

THE VOTE OF NEW YORK.

Cleveland's Plurality About 1,100.

The official count of the election returns in the State of New York was practically completed on Saturday, Nov. 15. All the Assembly districts in the city of New York were canvassed, and very little change was made from the results published in the morning papers. Cleveland's plurality in the State was shown to be a little over 1,100. This decides the great Presidential contest of 1884. Grover Cleveland, having received 219 electoral votes, is the choice of the Electoral College, and will be asked to be the next President of the United States. The following table shows the official vote of New York State by counties, as returned by the canvassing boards:

THE WINNER.

An Interview with Gov. Cleveland—His Attitude Toward Civil-Service Reform.

Edmund Hudson, editor of the Washington Capital, has had an interview at Albany with Gov. Cleveland. In referring to civil-service reform Mr. Hudson says: "I asked the Governor that the election had been fought and won on the issue of civil-service reform, and opponents of the enforcement at Washington who are supposed to hold their places in accordance with the new civil-service rules, and inquired of him whether it might not be well for him to make a few changes in the Cabinet for purposes of harmony and to apply civil-service reform in accordance with the spirit of the law. He replied:

"I think I have said enough on that subject. It is my intent to do what I can in my office to use the time in good faith in carrying out the spirit of the law. I am not in the habit of making promises.

"He repeated the words in a very decided manner and with a gesture of the hand that indicated more than the tone in which he spoke.

"I then asked him if he had any Presidential aspirations.

"He replied that the Governor speaks with a good deal of animation, and the strongest impression one gets from him is of great firmness of purpose. He is necessarily reticent, of course, but he is not a man who is easily moved. He is strongly attached to his friends, whomever they might ask a good deal of such a man, but he is not the man I should think would be a willing lieutenant.

"It is a pleasure to write these words, knowing that they will reach the eye of some who will be glad to read them. I think Grover Cleveland is a good man, and that he won't know how to withstand the pressure that inevitably may be brought down upon the occupant of the White House. There is strength and decision in the Democrats who will not be in any way that if anyone wanted to have a son with the Democrats who will not be in any way that anyone would not be asked to postpone the committee until another day. "Uncle Sam's Farm."

Extract from the Annual Address of Francis E. Willard, President of the National W. C. T. U.

Uncle Sam owns a farm; it is divided into thirty-eight fields, leased by his nephews, while he has nine new fields besides his home garden, under his care. The use of bitters by the hands is the great curse that inflicts Uncle Sam's farm. It makes the hired men lazy, unreliable, and many of them criminals. Three or four of his nephews have declared they would not allow this wretched drink to be either made or sold in their fields, have held a meeting of all their tenants and agreed to keep out this nuisance or die in the attempt. They have gone about this with so much pluck and determination that they would actually have kept their fields comparatively free, but for one thing, viz: Uncle Sam has a different theory about controlling this dangerous drink. He says: "It is a great evil but I will make of it 'a great beneficence.' In the first place, we shall always have these bitters made and sold; you may see that down for a final fact. Farmer John sends it across the water, and I shall let it in, but not until he has paid a heavy tax. That will go a good ways towards supporting me, and make your rent less. Then, since they will make this stuff anyhow, I will just go on in my nine new fields, on my garden spot, and you must not kick if I have it carted through your fields on the way to my own; besides, I'll let him make it under my own eye, in places set apart for that purpose, right in the fields next to yours, where they haven't this fanatical rule that you have about not letting it be made or sold. Then, in my own garden patch I'll make special arrangements not to have it sold unless each man that keeps it pays so much right direct to me. I shall do that. I'll let it come straight into my own house with the big dome.

"But Uncle Sam's nephews are not so stupid as the old gentleman imagines. They reply: "Now see here, so long as you give a writing to the men that makes these bitters, telling them what they may, and taking ninety cents for yourself to every twenty cents they get for all their trouble, so long will you wink this drink made and sold. Don't you see that you are the great bitters maker yourself? Why, you have become so avaricious that you actually hold in your own hands the key to every bitters manufactory on the big farm, and put your men there to watch by day and night, so that you shall be sure to get your share. You even tell the bitters men what sort of a building he must put up, and make him give you a bond for the building, and you lock up his materials for making the vile stuff, not lower until he has bought and paid for them under your eye. You hand them out and weigh and measure and make sure that you know just how much he manufactures, and then you shut it up tight and put a watch dog at the door so that nobody can go in or out without you knowing it. Then when the man sells a gallon, you take four fifths of the profits. If he sells to another man that works the stuff into some other kind of drink, you make the last man pay you $250 for this privilege; if he sells it at wholesale you charge him $150; if he sells it out to our hands in small quantities, $25. Then by doing this you make it next to impossible for us to keep the stuff out of our fields. It is so handy to smuggle across the line that we can never keep the abomination out altogether, do what we will. When you cart it across it is so easy to let a leg drop off here and there.

"The fair thing for you to do is, to go out of partnership with the business yourself, then to send word out into the territory of your nine distant fields that they can never have from you such a lease as you gave me in the thirty-eight older ones, unless they promise never to let the bitters in."

"Besides, could much those gentlemen anti-bitters men, "as your nues understand, you come into our fields, and if you find a man convicted of selling, you make him pay you so much, so that he gets a sort of permit from you that makes it insofar for us to convict him of his crime. I tell you Uncle Sam, we don't propose to stand this thing much longer, but to send a lot of our men to your golden patch and make you do as justice. We are on the war path for that very thing. We've picked out our allies anyone and counted up our men, and will be along quicker than you've any notion of to turn the bitters out of your big house and clear it up generally.

"Then we'll fix those nine fields so they'll never have a bitters factory or a bitters shop. We'll notify Farmer John across the way that he's got to shut up shop as far as coming over to your farm with his products is concerned; and then we'll proceed to draw up a writing and get all your thirty eight nephews to sign it, promising never to allow this bitters business to go on anywhere inside the boundaries of the old farm, because, if it's made at all, some of the hands are sure to get hold of it."

In the arena of national prohibition we shall fight our hardest battles and win our most substantial victories. Nothing will alarm and anger our opponents like our efforts in this field, because no effort less direct aims a blow so decisive at the very vitals of their trade.

WIT AND HUMOR.

There is a great depression in the business of making glass bottles. The business of emptying them seems to be carried on as briskly as ever.

"Why does Dina get more beaux than I?" asked the elder sister. "I don't know, unless she is a little archer," said mamma, with a quiver of her lips.

A Pennsylvania oil king who has made a fortune in the last three years is advertising for a wife. Very properly, he demands that the lady shall be "refined."

It is a time honored custom in Quincy, Fla., to salute a newly-married woman by firing a cannon. This is to remind them that the battle of life has fairly begun.

A correspondent says: "It is wonderful how many caves have been discovered in Tennessee." We would suggest that the same remark has been applied to Wall street.—Boston Post.

A hen's egg measuring 6½ by 8½ inches has been laid on the table of a Georgia editor. He proposes to keep it and let it ripen for the next dramatic combination that comes down that way.

"First come the missionaries, then the Consuls, and then after them the army," said King Theodore of Abyssinia some years ago to a French traveler, explaining his abhorrence of explorers and missionaries.

"You ought to put a sign over that hatchway," said a policeman to a storekeeper, "for some one may tumble into it." "All right," replied the merchant; and he tied one of his "Fall Opening" cards to the railing.

Queen Victoria invariably has her linen examined by a chemical expert. As yet, nothing but pure chalk and water and corn-starch have been discovered. The Queen lives in hopes of striking a trace of cream sometime.

A young man meaning to be very gallant, presented a lady with a rose, saying: "Madame, allow me to present you to one of your sisters." Judge of his chagrin when a bug crawled out and sat down in the middle of the rose.

Twelve-year-old bad boy: "Sis, your fellow's in a tight place." Sister, alarmed: "Why, what do you mean, Bob?" "When I was getting your face powder in the drug store this noon I saw him in behind the screen." Sister: "Sh!—papa will hear." Bad boy: "P's was there, too!"—Burlington Free Press.

A writer in the Century says it would take a limited express train several hundred years to reach the sun, and the fare at the customary rates would be over $2,500,000. That settles it! We shall never make a railroad journey to the sun. The fare is reasonable enough, but we couldn't neglect our business so long.—Norristown Herald.

The following is the curriculum of the schools of Journalism: "Don't write on but one side of your paper. Use capital letters when necessary. Don't make a paragraph only where one is needed. Spell proper names correctly and others as nearly correct as convenient." By observing these rules anyone can become a great journalist.

Old man Pettigrew, of Austin, is very precise in his statements, and is also a strict constitutionalist. One morning a neighbor rushed in on Pettigrew while the latter was eating his breakfast and exclaimed excitedly: "Your house is on fire." "Sir?" "Your house is burning up." "You are wrong, sir." "Wrong?" "Yes, sir; this is not my house. I only rent it."—Texas Siftings.

Boy howling. His mother gives him an apple. "Don't want that old apple," he cries. "I am glad of it," his mother replies, "for it is little sister's, and she'll want it when she wakes up." Then he wants it. "Gimme!" he cries, and he is not satisfied until the apple is gnawed beyond recognition. Then he feels better. The majority of boys do not grow up to be good citizens.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Something lacking. Baker—"Yes, mum; I now put my name on my bread to prevent my rivals from imitating my loaves and getting my custom." Housekeeper—"A wise precaution. But was that bread you left here yesterday genuine?" "O, yes, mum." "Then I would suggest that you add something besides your name to the loaves." "Certainly, mum. If you say so. What is it?" "The date."

A Boylston street dentist was recently asked by one of his lady patients if he would make a set of false teeth for her dog, who, being old, had lost his own. She said she was willing to have the experiment made on her darling, whose digestion was now greatly impaired, and that many other people she knew would be glad to have their pets' absent teeth replaced if her dog's set was a success. The dentist declined to try.—Beacon.

The dude is no longer fashionable. He is out of date and far removed from the fashionable men of to-day. The dude was in his glory a little less than two years ago, when the fashion of wearing abominably tight trousers, vacant smiles, pointed boots, and silver-headed sticks first started in. For the first time in the history of civilization a fashion was popular which gave narrow-chested, cadaverous, and spindle-shanked young men a chance for their lives.—San Francisco Argonaut.

"Wife—"Did you meet Mrs. Smythe at the party last evening? She has been abroad a long time, you know." Husband—"Yes, I had quite a chat with her, and, judging from her manner, I am very much afraid I offended her." Wife—"Offended her. And how, pray? Husband—"By paying her a very pretty compliment." Wife—"Nonsense. A woman is never offended by a pretty compliment. What did you say to her?" Husband—"I told her she was growing old gracefully." Wife—"Well, you are a fool."

The tallest bird known to ornithologists was found by Professor Hedges in the lower eocene deposits near Paris, France. It was over twelve feet in height, and could have bitten a man's head off as easily as a woodpecker can nip a cherry. We cannot be too thankful that this bird has gone out of fashion and existence. Ladies would have wanted to wear it on their hats, and the price would have been frightfully high. And besides, men who sat behind such bonnet ornaments in the theaters would be unable to see whether a ballet or a prayer-meeting was in progress on the stage.—Norristown Herald.

Joe Jefferson says the effect that playing one part a great number of times has on an actor is forgetfulness of his line. "A story is told," he adds, "of an English actor, who, after playing one part for a very long time, forgot his lines one night. 'It's very strange,' said the stage manager, when the actor came off, 'that you are not perfect in that part by this time. You have been playing it for 200 nights.' "Well," said the actor, 'do you expect me to remember it forever?' I think one part cannot be played too often if the actor does not lose his interest in it. It is just as it is with age. We are only old according to our feelings, not our years."

"I explain it all to you," said one of the partners in a furniture house in Western Michigan which had protested its paper. "You see I and my brother Snake whas bartners. We each draw $20 per week and we hef money left to lay all our debts and keep up stock. Snake he goes outer to Chicago, and enfurmonly asks him if we make some dividend and how much. When he comes home he says we doun' attand opp mit older house if we doun' make some dividend. Dat look all right to me. We have $2,000 laid away, und I take half and Snake half. Then some drafts come Snake doun like to buy, and I feels sinnt det vhay, too. If you have some dividends, dot vhas all clear for you, und you doun' just lim back in dier firm. "Uncle Sam's Farm."

Extract from the Annual Address of Francis E. Willard, President of the National W. C. T. U.

Uncle Sam owns a farm; it is divided into thirty-eight fields, leased by his nephews, while he has nine new fields besides his home garden, under his care. The use of bitters by the hands is the great curse that inflicts Uncle Sam's farm. It makes the hired men lazy, unhealthy, and many of them criminals. Three or four of his nephews have declared they would not allow this wretched drink to be either made or sold in their fields. We have held a meeting of all their tenants and agreed to keep out this nuisance or die in the attempt. They have gone about this with so much pluck and determination that they would actually have kept their fields comparatively free, but for one thing, viz: Uncle Sam has a different theory about controlling this dangerous drink. He says: "It is a great evil but I will make of it 'a great benefiscence.' In the first place, we shall always have these bitters made and sold; you may set that down for a final fact. Farmer John sends it across the water, and I shall let it in, but not until he has paid a heavy tax. That will go a good way towards supporting me, and makes your rent less. Then, since they will make this stuff anyhow, I will just go on in my nine new fields, open my garden spot, and you must not mind it if I have it carted through your fields on the way to my own; besides, I'll let 'em make it under my own eye, in places set apart for that purpose right in the fields next to yours, where they haven't this fanatical rule that you have about not letting it be made or sold. Then, in my own garden patch I'll make special arrangements not to have it sold unless each man that keeps it pays so much right direct to me. If they'll do that I'll let it come straight into my own house with the big guns."

But Uncle Sam's nephews are not so stupid as the old gentleman imagines. They reply: "Now see here, so long as you give a writing to the men that make these bitters, telling them that they may, and taking ninety cents for yourself to every twenty cents they pay for all their trouble, so long will you want this drink made and sold. Don't you see that you are the great bitters maker yourself? Why, you have become so avaricious that you actually hold in your own hand the key to every bitters manufactory on the big farm, and put your men there to watch by day and night, so that you shall be sure to get your share. You even sell the bitters metwhat sort of a building he must put up, and make him give you a bonus for the building, and you lock up the materials for making the vile stuff, not however until he has bought and paid for them under your eye. You stand there and weigh and measure and make sure that you know just how much he manufactures, and then you shut it up tight and put a watch dog at the door so that nobody can go in or out without you knowing it. Then when the man sells a gallon, you take four-fifths of the profits. I go to seize to another man that works the stuff into some other kind of drink, you make the last man pay you $200 for this privilege, if he sells it at wholesale you charge him $100; if he sells it out to our hands in small quantities, $25. Then by doing this you make it next to impossible for us to keep the stuff out of our fields. It is so handy to smuggle across the line where we can never keep the abomination out altogether, do what we will. When you cart it across it is so easy to hide a keg drop off here and there.

"The fair thing for you to do is, to go out of partnership with the business yourself, then to send word out into the territory of your nine distant fields that they can never have from you such a lease as you gave us in the thirty-eight older ones, unless they promise never to let the bitters in."

"Besides," continued these go-ahead anti-bitters men, "as your rules now stand, you come into our fields, and if you find a man convicted of selling, you make him pay you so much, so that he gets a sort of permit from you that makes it harder for us to convict him of his crime. I tell you Uncle Sam, we don't propose to stand this thing much longer, for to send a lot of our men to your garden patch and make you do as justice. We are on the war path for that very thing. We've picked out our leaders and counted up our men, and will be along quicker than you've any notion of to turn the bitters out of your big house and clear it up generally.

"Then we'll fix those nine fields so they'll never have a bitters factory or a bitters shop. We'll notify Farmer John across the way that he's got to shut up shop as far as coming over to your farm with his products is concerned; and then we'll proceed to draw up a writing and get all your thirty eight nephews to sign it, promising never to allow this bitters business to go on anywhere inside the boundaries of the old farm, assuming, if it's made at all, some of the hands are sure to get hold of it."

In the arsenal of national prohibition we shall fight our hardest battles and win our most substantial victories. Nothing will alarm and anger our opponents like our efforts in this field, because no effort less direct aims a blow so decisive at the very vitals of their trade.

WIT AND HUMOR.

There is a great depression in the business of making glass bottles. The business of emptying them seems to be carried on as briskly as ever.

"Why does Dina get more beaux than I?" asked the elder sister. "I don't know, unless she is a little archer," said mamma, with a quiver of her lips.

A Pennsylvania oil king who has made a fortune in the last three years is advertising for a wife. Very properly, he demands that the lady shall be "refined."

It is a time honored custom in Quincy, Fla., to salute a newly-married woman by firing a cannon. This is to remind them that the battle of life has fairly begun.

A correspondent says: "It is wonderful how many caves have been discovered in Tennessee." We would suggest that the same remark has been applied to Wall street.—Boston Post.

A hen's egg measuring 6¾ by 5¾ inches has been laid on the table of a Georgia editor. He proposes to keep it and put it ripen for the next dramatic combination that comes down that way.

"First come the missionaries, then the Consuls, and then after them the armies," said King Tneodore of Abyssinia some years ago to a French traveler, explaining his abhorrence of explorers and missionaries.

"You ought to put a sign over that hatchway," said a policeman to a storekeeper, "for some one may tumble into it." "All right," replied the merchant; and he tied one of his "Fall Opening" cards to the railing.

Queen Victoria invariably has her ice cream analyzed by a chemical expert. As yet, nothing but pure chalk and water and corn-starch have been discovered. The Queen lives in hopes of striking a trace of cream sometime.

A young man meaning to be very gallant, presented a lady with a rose, saying: "Madame, allow me to present you to one of your sisters." Judge of his chagrin when a bug crawled out and sat down in the middle of the rose.

Twelve-year-old bad boy: "Sis, your feller's in a tight place." Sister, alarmed: "Why, what do you mean, Bob?" "When I was getting your face powder in the drug store this noon I saw him in behind the screen." Sister: "Shal—paps will hear." Bad boy: "It's was there, too!"—Burlington Free Press.

A writer in the Century says it would take a limited express train several hundred years to reach the sun, and the fare at the customary rates would be over $2,500,000. That settles it! We shall never make a railroad journey to the sun. The fare is reasonable enough, but we couldn't neglect our business so long.—Norristown Herald.

The following is the curriculum of the schools of journalism: "Don't write on but one side of the paper. Use capital letters when necessary. Don't make a paragraph only where one is needed. Spell proper names correctly and others as nearly correct as convenient." By observing these rules anyone can be one a great journalist.

Old man Pettigrew, of Austin, is very precise in his statements, and is also a strict constructionist. One morning a neighbor rushed in on Pettigrew while the latter was eating his breakfast and exclaimed excitedly: "Your house is on fire." "Sir?" "Your house is burning up." "You are wrong sir." "Wrong?" "Yes, sir; this is not my house. I only rent it."—Texas Siftings.

Her howling. His mother gives him an apple. "Don't want that old apple," he cries. "I am glad of it," the mother replies, "for it is little sister's, and she'll want it when she wakes up." Then he wants it. "Gimme!" he cries, and he is not satisfied until the apple is gnawed beyond recognition. Then he feels better. The majority of boys do not grow up to be good citizens.—Arkansaw Traveler.

Something lacking. Baker—"Yes, mum; I now put my name on my bread to prevent my rivals from imitating my loaves and getting my custom." Housekeeper—"A wise precaution. But was that bread you left here yesterday genuine?" "O, yes, mum." "Then I would suggest that you add something besides your name to the loaves." "Certainly, mum, if you say so. What is it?" "The date."

A Boylston street dentist was recently asked by one of his lady patients if he would make a set of false teeth for her dog; who, being old, had lost his own. She said she was willing to have the experiment made on her darling, whose digestion was now greatly impaired, and that many other people she knew would be glad to have their pees' absent teeth replaced if her dog's set was a success. The dentist declined to try.—Beacon.

The dude is no longer fashionable. He is out of date and far removed from the fashionable men of to-day. The dude was in his glory a little less than two years ago, when the fashion of wearing abominably tight trousers, vacant smiles, pointed boots, and silver-headed sticks first started in. For the first time in the history of civilization a fashion was popular which gave narrow-chested, cadaverous, and spindle-shanked young men a chance for their lives.—San Francisco Argonaut.

"Wife.—"Did you meet Mrs. Smythe at the party last evening? She has been abroad a long time, you know." Husband.—"Yes, I had quite a chat with her, and, judging from her manner, I am very much afraid I offended her." Wife.—"Offended her. And how, pray?" Husband.—"By paying her a very pretty compliment." Wife.—"Nonsense. A woman is never offended by a pretty compliment. What did you say to her?" Husband.—"I told her she was growing old gracefully." Wife.—"Well, you are a fool."

The tallest bird known to ethnologists was found by Professor Herbert in the lower eocene deposits near Paris, France. It was over twelve feet in height, and could have bitten a man's head off as easily as a woodpecker can nip a cherry. We cannot be too thankful that this bird has gone out of fashion and existence. Ladies would have wanted to wear it on their hats, and the price would have been frightfully high. And besides, men who sat behind such bonnet ornaments in the theaters would be unable to see whether a ballet or a prayer-meeting was in progress on the stage.—Norristown Herald.

Joe Jefferson says the effect that playing one part a great number of times has on an actor is forgetfulness of his line. "A story is told," he adds, "of an English actor, who, after playing one part for a very long time, forgot his lines one night: 'It's very strange,' said the stage manager, when the actor came off, 'that you are not perfect in that part by this time. You have been playing it for 200 nights.' 'Well,' said the actor, 'do you expect me to remember it forever? I think one part cannot be played too often if the actor does not lose his interest in it. It is just as it is with age. We are only old according to our feeling, not our years."

"I explain it all to you," said one of the partners in a furniture house in Western Michigan when had protested his paper. "You see I and my brudder Shake is partners. We each draw $20 per week and we had money left to buy all our duds and keep up stock. Shake he goes safer to Chicago, and everybody asks him if we make some dividend and how much. Then he comes home he says we doun' skinnd nup nuf solder houses if we doun' make some dividends. Dot look all right to me. We have $2,000 laid away, and I take half and Shake half. Then some drafts come Shake doun' like to bay, and I feels almost dot vlay, too. If you have some dividends, dot vhan all clear for you, and you doun' put him back in dur firm. I vhas a little mixed up, and I guess we like to sell out."—Wall Street News.

NEWS CONDENSED.

Concise Record of the Week.

EASTERN.

A severe earthquake shock was felt in various portions of New Hampshire Nov. 22.

At a Boston hotel, as the result of a bet on Blaine, Charles A. Hill stuck a fat cow, which had been delicately roasted, whole the winner and his friends dined on grouse.

The schools at Nashua, N. H., have closed on account of the prevalence of scarlet fever.

A telegraph man at work in Brooklyn saw that something had breaken his telegraph wire eighty feet above, and made the second in time to hook him to the pole before he became unconscious from a nervous fit. A policeman then found a fireman's sectionladder, and he suffered no rescue.

The Lancaster (Pa.) crematorium was dedicated last week, and the body of a woman was reduced to ashes.

At New York, Daniel Shea, aged 70, killed Margaret Miller's cat for keeping him awake nights. In a quarrel about the matter then fatally stabbed Mrs. Miller.

Attorney General Brewster, in his annual report, states that the indifference of residents of the District of Columbia to the prosecuting of the Treasury prevents the conviction of thieves at the hands of local juries, and he recommends that the jurisdiction of the federal courts of Mary land be extended over the district.

WESTERN.

Dakota's permanent school property is valued at $9,095,656.

The trial of Daniel Holcomb, at Jackson, Mich., for the murder of the Crouch family has been indefinitely postponed on account of the death of Frank E. Howlett, prosecuting attorney.

The Grand Opera-house, in Market street, St. Louis, valued at $175,000, was destroyed by fire.

The Rock Island plow-works which have been closed for some time, have resumed, giving employment to about 600 men.

R. C. Winston & Co., of St. Paul, hardware dealers, have assigned, with liabilities placed at $80,000.

Articles of incorporation have been filed at Indianapolis, on behalf of the Eastern and Western Air Line Railway, which is said to have a capital stock of $2,000,000, and which proposes to construct a continuous line through Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Pennsylvania.

An effigy of John P. St. John was the other morning found hanging in the public square at Macon, Ind. The Prohibition candidate was also hanged in effigy at Lake Geneva, Wis.

Daniel L. Wells, one of the richest and most prominent citizens of Milwaukee, died in that city, aged 69 years.

A tax voted in a certain ward of Salt Lake, by Mormons for school purposes, is being collected by the Gentiles, who contend that the school is conducted in the interest of the Mormon Church.

A mob attacked and demolished a saloon at Blanchester, Ohio, stoned the saloon-keeper, a man and a woman, until he became unconscious, and carried the contents of the saloon into the street and burned them. Disorder continues in the town, and the authorities are preparing to make it interesting for the ringers.

At Logansport, Ind., the Rev. W. E. Lemcke, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, assaulted R. E. Lamkin, editor of the Daily Dispatch, knocking him down, the editor walking off upon rear leg his foe. The Monday before election Mr. Lemcke preached a semi-political sermon, and some thinks that the Pharos had published instances against the minister's character, and the assault was the result.

A stockyard building on Monroe street, Chicago, occupied by the Chicago Paper Company, and two or three printing firms, was burned to ashes. The loss is placed at $100,000.

At Huntington, Oregon, last week, connection was made between the Oregon Railway and Navigation system and the Oregon Short Line, thus completing the fourth line of railroad across the continent.

The case of Anne G. White, who recovered $50 damages from the Milwaukee City Railway Company for injuries received, was reversed and remanded by the Wisconsin Supreme Court, on the ground that the plaintiff refused to exhibit her injured leg to physicians appointed by the railway company.

At Monmouth, Ill., a Texas named H. R. Thompson, who had sustained heavy losses by the failure of the First National Bank, fired five shots at R. T. G. Hubbard, the defaulting cashier, without hitting him.

SOUTHERN.

Acute typhoid-tyfoidentery is the medical name given to the fatal sickness which has recently broken out in the western portions of Virginia. One hundred and fifty deaths have occurred in Wise County alone.

San Antonio (Tex.) dispatch: Lieut Eggleston, who was ordered in pursuit of the Apaches who raided Presidio County, telegraphed the result of his scouting to Gen. Stanley. Farmer Petty was shot three times in the head, and his wife had been outraged and murdered. Three children were found butchered. The Indians were trailed to where they crossed the Rio Grande into Mexico. Eggleston gave up the pursuit at the river, at the reciprocal treaty for the crossing of troops has expired.

W. A. Pledger, Chairman, has issued a call for a meeting of the Colored National Committee to convene at New Orleans Dec. 17, to consider the situation of the colored people under the democratic party.

A letter from an intimate friend of John Wilkes Booth is published at Baltimore, to the effect that Booth did not murder President Lincoln for political reasons, but for revenge. After years and entreaties Booth secured President Lincoln's promise that Captain John Yates Beall, condemned to hanged as a spy, would be spared, but a few days later Beall was executed, and then Booth swore vengeance upon the President, and kept his oath.

In regard to the plague prevalent in southwest Virginia, a telegram from Lynchburg says: "The latest advice concerning the epidemic in Wise, Lee, Dickinson, and Buchanan Counties are heartrending. In Guests River, Wise County, within a radius of four miles are thirty cases of the disease, in one instance the father, mother, and six children died. Many persons die for want of attention. Business is suspended, all being concerned with the sick and dying. Six persons were buried in one graveyard in one day. The disease is assuming a milder form in some localities. Not less than 175 of the best citizens of Wise County have died of it."

WASHINGTON.

In the opinion of Senator Allison, of Iowa, the earliest session of Congress is not likely to be an important one from a political standpoint. President's administration, he thinks, will be conservative rather than aggressive.

Senator Edmunds is said to be preparing legislation relative to the Pacific railroads. The Senate Judiciary Committee has the funding act under consideration, and strong influences are at work to secure favorable action on the House bill.

Another effort is on foot in Washington looking to extending the whisky-bonded period for two years.

In the Court of Claims at Washington the case of The Government vs. The Union Pacific land-grant lands, The Government demands reach $4,500,000, while the other claims of the railway amount to $1,500,000.

POLITICAL.

Albany (N. Y.) special: The State Board of canvassers has completed its labors and adjourned. The proceedings throughout the canvass were harmonious and without a ripple of excitement. No contests were made, the returns were promptly, and satisfactorily settled. The official votes in several of the counties were rectified by personal canvass, and the board feeling precluded among the members of the Senate, the canvass of Kingsburg, and official figures have not been published, and claims have to have been remarkably accurate. The footing of the aldes are as follows:

Highest Democratic elector, Pierce 563,154
Highest Republican elector, Carson 562,005
Lowest Democratic elector, Pittenger 563,148
Lowest Republican elector, Harris 562,001

Urcutty.
Highest Prohibition elector, Miller 25,006
Highest Democratic elector, Pierce 563,154
Highest Republican elector, Richmond 17,004
Lowest Butler elector, Cameron 562,001

The Albany correspondent of the Philadelphia Press reports from Hancock as saying the following language touching the result of the Stephens election, was used after March 4:

"Mr. Stephens and conservative Democrats are the result of a schism in the Democratic party which has been growing since the war, and with the best and trendest minds in the party, it has been for years a matter of regret. An adjustment that shall at least secure harmony, and a return to the ancient and honorable ways of the party, is a consummation dear to most among us, and which we have long hoped would come. I do not think there should be any feeling of uncertainty, or anxiety, or fear, on the part of the friends of the recent election is concerned. Those who have been in the habit of looking to the South for the future of the United States as the source of power, and the fountain of all prosperity and advancement of the country, will be disappointed, and perhaps, some malcontents will be found among us, as certain as anything can be stated in advance of the event, that the Democratic party will be one of great prominence. I am a Democrat of the Democratic party, I believe with the great mass of my party, I feel that I have great responsibility, and I shall endeavor to do my duty to the best of my ability. Which way I turn, there is no person whatever for this feeling of confusion and uncertainty. Some do not want to know, and unless do not see things in the same light, and have different conceptions of what is the great consequence to happen. Democratic party and Democrats are as much entitled to have and enjoy their judgment, as I am to have their opinions, and they will be as sincere in the belief that the Democratic party, and all the Republicans would but they been engaged in the war, and have contributed to the preservation of the Union, as some other people from the disturbance of a long period of power, and that, whatever the statistics growing out of defeat has passed off, there will be a return to the ancient and honorable ways of the party, and a fair and honest chance for all to the political advancement of all.

MISCELLANEOUS.

At most of the leading business centers throughout the country, as reported in special telegrams to Bradstreet's New York, last week, there has been a slight gain in the demand for 4-4 staple sorts, more noticeable for dry goods. The improvement is chiefly noticeable, however, by comparison with the extreme dullness which immediately preceded and followed the Presidential election, for there are yet no visible evidences of a real or widespread increase in the demand for or shipment of goods. The tendency of prices of most staples continues downward, but there are some exceptions. In grain stocks in New England the business on either side of the market is reported as restricted, and that low stocks warrant no speculation. Breadstuffs have declined almost steadily. Tall, immediately and prospective supplies of wheat at home and afloat check any speculation. Provisions have been very quiet, prices generally lower, and no advance can be anticipated. Cotton and British stocks are smaller than last year, and are unchanged. Hog products have been cheaper, C. S. quoting mid-western and cutting in an expectedly free receipts of hogs. The relative cheapness of corn, as compared with the prices at which hogs are selling should encourage the farmers to ship never hogs until after fattening them on the last year's average weight.

Nineteen Chinamen who were put on board a steamer at Victoria, to be sent to United States from Victoria, British Columbia, were seized by the authorities at Victoria.

War has been declared between Jeff Davis and Gen. W. T. Sherman. Some weeks ago the latter addressed a letter to the ex-President of the Confederacy and inquired if he had authority to secure the detention of the remains of his brother, who died in the country. Davis replied in a letter denouncing the allegation as false and calling Gen. Sherman a "liar" in saying he wished to destroy the liberties of the United States. The ex-President, etc., winds up by challenging the hero of the "March through Georgia" to make good his statements or else "take back the lie in the manliest form, for, man, in no idle sense, I am not to be trifled with." Mr. Davis will get all he wants in due time.

At a copper camp in Sonora, Mexico, one policeman attempted to disarm a number of Americans, and in the affray two men were killed and many others wounded.

Mrs. Bonnel, the Quincy murderess, will not be hanged, her sentence having been commuted to imprisonment for life.

FOREIGN.

A special commission appointed to investigate the cause of the great increase of tuberculosis in Berlin has filed its report, they attribute the trouble entirely to the great cleanness of French functions and cities, and to remedy the evil recommend the enactment of an almost unprecedented prohibitory law. They say that the dirty habitually and whose to make so filthy as almost to drive them from the country, and that the law so drastic enactment ought to be so as to make it practically impossible for any one but the very rich to preserve liquor in any form.

It is stated by an English journal that Prince Alexander of Bulgaria and Princess Beatrice will except a peerage.

Russia will build a telegraph wire from Asiatic to Merv to Herat.

Prince Albert Victor, the elder son of the Prince of Wales and the future King of England, is to make a tour of the United States and Canada next year. He will be 21 years of age the 8th of January next.

A $500,000 "find" has been discovered among the tale Duke of Brunswick's effects in the shape of an old iron safe which was generally supposed to be empty.

Small-pox among the natives at Douglas has driven the British troops to Quetta forty miles distant. An epidemic of cholera is said to prevail among El Muidi's forces.

LATER NEWS ITEMS.

David Sternberg, a dry-goods merchant of Louisville, has made an assignment to secured liabilities of $60,000.

A boy 14 years of age is in jail at St. Albans, W. Va., for robbing the mails. He confessed his guilt.

The shoe-shop of the penitentiary at Lincoln was entered by thieves, who forced the safe and took $2,000 in currency without rousing the guards.

Small-pox is epidemic near Toronto, and the report appears has increased quite alarmingly. Precautions of the most thorough sort have been taken to prevent the further invasion of the disease.

Canadian distillers and rectifiers generally are well under common cause against the proposed importation of foreign product of American consumed makers. The prospect of a flood of cheap United States whisky has raised a stormy process in Toronto.

The Administration Church, after March 4, says a Washington dispatch, is to be changed to the Democratic Church, of which the Rev. William Bartlett, formerly of Chicago, is pastor. It is the church which the family of Mr. Blaine has attended, but because of its rapid growth and great wealth the project was started a year ago to build a new church in the West, and the money has already been raised for it. The last Blaine and President attended the church on Sunday, Nov. 9.

Two strange crooks fell out with each other at Albion, and were tracked to the police, together with a chest full of burglars tools, other, revolvers, etc.

A Flint doctor tells of a lady well known and highly respected in that city who called upon him and wanted to sell her body. The goods to be delivered after her death, and used for dissection in the interest of science. She was hard up and needed money, and had the price to the judgment of the doctor. He could not make the purchase.

A telegram from Mr. Clemens and Frank Lemon, a gentleman about 50 years old, disappeared from New York City and was suddenly at the National Hotel here this afternoon about 5 o'clock. Deemed was haggard and limping with some trouble in the arrangement of the legs, which he suddenly fell over and expired almost instantly. He had been taking bitter medicine for some time, and the doctors have been of the opinion that he was suffering from a tumor in the stomach for many years. It is thought that he died of a tumor in the stomach. Heart disease is thought to be the cause of his death.

—More than one-fourth of land in the state of Pennsylvania is owned by the Penn family, estimated at 1,000,000 acres, reported. In 1876 Congress made a grant to the Pennsylvania Railroad of 500,000 acres, now built and the land was finally sold. The sales made up to 1880 amounted to 300,000 acres, and the Secretary of the Interior made a decision to the effect that lands which have at any time been sold are not subject to the homestead law.

Following is the official vote of Oregon: Platte, 56,57; Cleveland, 54,293; Stephens, 1,; Johns, 1,; Dunning, 2,226.

It can truthfully be said of many a young man who has "a girl in Oregon," that the young lady has a soft spot in her heart for the fellow who gives an average dude on soft things—such as a Mother Hubbard, or a sunbonnet or the lovely. Yet to be polish now to the tune of "Sweet Bye and Bye." Mr. Hubbard, of Oregon, was appointed Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. Dunning, of Illinois, Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

—Some worthless wretch or wretches have stamped themselves by wantonly destroying and overturning grave stones in the cemetery at Oxford.

—Two strange crooks fell out with each other at Albion, and were tracked to the police, together with a chest full of burglars tools, other, revolvers, etc.

CLEVELAND AND HENDRICKS.

The President-Elect Indicates His Policy Toward the Colored Race.

The Vice President-Elect's Views on Civil Service and Revenue Reform.

CLEVELAND.

His Policy Toward the Colored Race and the Commercial Interests of the Country.

Gov. Cleveland was asked by a reporter at Albany, the other day, if he was aware of the delusion toward the colored people of the South, and if he would do anything to undeceive them and undeceive them. Gov. Cleveland replied: "Yes, I have been astonished at the statements that have been so plentifully published among the colored people that in some way the election of a Democratic President would be followed by a reversal of the policy of the United States toward them. I can even fold that some of them are led to suppose the result of the recent election was a thing that they were to be made slaves. All this has appeared to me to be absurd, and I have felt that it would be a proper thing for me to do something to undeceive them. I do not wish to speak in terms of disparagement of the party of the South, but I may say that the Democratic party has been in the power of the people of the Empire State, as well as in the South, for a considerable number of years. Let me be as patient now to the tone of the South as I have been to the tone of the Empire State, and I shall be responsible for the future of that country, and I shall be able to be responsible for the future of the country in the matter of peace and good government to the people of the South. The South is not alone in the power to set this great lesson—a lesson that we have learned in the North—that the rights of every citizen are to be respected. The South is now in the great work commenced and carried out in the Empire State of New York. In the year when the Democratic party was once more placed in the power of the people of the Empire State, the government of the people, by the people, and for the people, was not in danger, and a great change after the 4th of March, when President Grover Cleveland takes his seat at Washington.

It has been decided by the people that there is no sectional distinction between the North and the South, and that the people are for a reconstruction—a construction that will bring the people together in a common country, as well as upon capital; a construction that will be a construction that will be a construction of the laws, together with a chose 1st of legislation, that there shall be adjustment of the laws, and that there shall be no longer any ground for any one to say that the country without loss to the public treasury, but with great advantage to the public treasury of the Government.

I am in favor of the civil service reform. Of course I am in favor of civil service reform. I am not in favor of a continuance of the system which has been in force for years that are past. The people are tired of it. My friends have asked me to come to Washington and what civil service I have confidence in? I have confidence in the civil service of Washington, together with a chose 1st of legislation, after a schoolmaster's examination, that I will put you in the hands of a man who I have in the days of Andrew Jackson. Let a true man be placed in the hands of the people, and let the people be responsible for the civil service, and let them see to it that the right man is placed in the right place. It seems to me that the court in that matter should be left to the people, and that no good thing should take place in the civil service, and let there be no change in the matter, but other cases should be left to

THE JOURNAL.

BY CHAS. J. STRANG.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

Something to Remember.

At the request of leading democrats and others, and for ease of future reference, the following paragraphs from the Sentinel are grouped together. They are presumed to reflect the true inwardness of the editors, one of whom at least, may find it desirable to ask favors of the people he has been insulted. Especially noticeable, also, is the effect of local public opinion in the modified utterances of Nov. 26, amounting almost to a retraction.

From the Charlevoix Sentinel, November 12.

Prohibitionists how do you like it?

The rebels have at last taken Washington.

Only a step from a hangman to a president!

Appalling spectacle! The most notorious libertine in the country elected president.—What are we coming to?

A solid south, with a thousand New York slums and few poor, misguided prohibitionists have elected "their man."

It is our earnest wish that every prohibitionist in the state of New York could be compelled to drink a barrel of democratic whiskey in fifteen minutes.

In New York and New England Blaine lost 25,000 mugwumps and 40,000 saintjohnny prohibitionists. It was these defections and not the strength of the democratic party which has rendered his election doubtful at any stage of the campaign.

When the democratic phalanx of Charlevoix received their most flattering returns from New York, they marched down street, as we supposed to the Sentinel office. They fell one door short. [The building nearest the Sentinel is a saloon, to which this is supposed to refer.—ED. JOURNAL.]

We hope our readers will pardon any shortcoming noticeable in the Sentinel in this and the preceding issue. The fact is, a mule kicked us last Tuesday night, and things were somewhat demoralized about these premises. But we take great comfort in contemplating the fact that there are several others in Charlevoix county who were kicked out of time by good majorities.

From the Charlevoix Sentinel November 19.

We like ladies—no disguising that—but when women take a hand in politics, distance lends enchantment.

"Ladies of the W. C. T. U. have reason to feel proud and encouraged over the prohibition vote east in Michigan this fall." They have, have they? Well we know of a good many ladies that are not proud of it.

All W. C. T. U. ladies of intelligence and discrimination regret the outcome of the late election. They realize that there is a temperance reform needed in the domain of morals of most vital interest to them, and that the selection of a libertine for president is a step in the wrong direction.

From the Charlevoix Sentinel November 26.

The Sentinel does not take notice of small things, nor subvert its columns to the gratifying of personal malice or jealousy. It has a higher aim. This has always been its aim, and will continue to be.

But we are not one of those who pretend to believe that a "Pandora's box of evils" will be opened upon the country by the incoming administration. We do not believe that the confederate debt will be paid, rebel claims allowed, or rebels pensioned. Did a republican senate not stand as an insurmountable barrier against those measures we are frank to confess our belief that Grover Cleveland would not give them the sanction of his signature.

Notes and News.

Out of the forty-five democratic congressman who followed the lead of Randall and voted with the republicans to defeat tariff reform legislation only 18 have been returned to congress.

A Fort Gratiot man loudly proclaimed that if Cleveland was elected this country would be depopulated. Imagine his surprise when just after he learned Cleveland's election, his wife presented him a pair of elegant twins.

The persistent malignity of republican organs toward the prohibition element will tend to solidify rather than weaken their ranks, and the purpose of that hostility to force them back within the republican fold, will prove a failure.

We have no idea that with a democratic president there will be any change in the monetary affairs of state or nation. Business will not be depressed or ruin come to us. It is the talk of the political shark, and merely for effect, to put another dollar in his pocket.—Cadillac Times.

A leading merchant of Fife Lake informs the Comet that the number of lumber camps in that vicinity is largely in excess of last year and that although they are at present running small crews, they are preparing for a big cut this winter. This means a large amount business for Fife Lake.

The "Kazoo" is the name of a new instrument of torture shaped like a toy whistle and operating upon the principal of a comb and paper combination. It emits a sound as weird and fantastic as its name. In competent hands it is capable of doing great execution. It figured quite largely in political demonstrations in large cities, and is not unknown in local musical circles.

The effects of Cleveland's election are making themselves felt with unexpected promptness. Last Monday the Cleveland, Ohio, rolling works resumed operations in all departments for the first time since 1876. They give employment to 3,000 hands, being 1,700 more than was ever before employed by that company. On the same day one of the largest of the Pennsylvania iron furnaces started up after several months of idleness.

We learn from the Tribune that the Harrison Wire Works or Wire-Pull ing Works, of St. Louis, have gone out of blast on account of the election of Cleveland. As a matter of fact, the Harrison Wire Works of St. Louis collapsed about one month before the election took place. The election of two republican presidents and the appointment of the Rev. Dr. Burchard as White house chaplain could not have saved the Harrison Wire Works from bankruptcy.—N. Y. World.

Out croppings of genuine coal have been found in the Pigeon river section of Cheboygan county. For years there have been rumors of coal underlying portions of this county, and we believe this is the first instance where any definite discoveries have been make. We understand arrangements are being made to investigate the matter and see just what can be developed. Should favorable prospects be the result, a company will undoubtedly be organized to open up a mine.—Tribune.

A steam barge loaded with lumber and towing a schooner with the same kind of a cargo ran ashore on Whiskey Island, one of the Beaver group, last Tuesday. The barge threw overboard a quantity of lumber and succeeded in getting off, but a tug was sent to relieve the schooner, which was only accomplished after 400,000 feet of lumber had been thrown into the lake. This is a better crop than corn or wheat for the Islanders, and every available craft was engaged picking up lumber.

The great crisis of the presidential year—the presidential election itself—is now over, and the ill effects on business of the excitement that has prevailed even since early summer ought soon to pass away, giving place to increased business activity. It will take some weeks, perhaps, for the tumultuous waves of overwrought feeling to subside, but when the public mind recovers its normal placidity, its grasp upon the business problems before the people will be all the stronger for temporary relaxation afforded by the campaign.—Marquette Mining Journal.

The plan of having school books paid for out of the public school fund is finding favor where tried. If it be part of the duty of the state to educate its children, as the believers in the public school system claim it is, it is very easy to say that that duty includes the expense for teachers, for houses, etc. The matter of buying books is a great hardship to many poor people, and the impossibility of doing it, in many cases, keeps children out of the schools. The state could buy the books at lower prices than the individual parent can, and the additional tax for purchasing books would be light on the individual taxpayer.—Adrian Times.

Forest culture is the most certain investment which the owners of land in this country can make. F. W. Glenn, M. P., of Oshawa, Ont., "entertains on" to this idea, and has put it to a practical test, by purchasing 5,000 walnut trees, four feet high, in the western states and planting a portion of them on his own unproductive real estate and inducing his neighbors to invest in the balance. Five thousand walnut trees in thirty years, in the natural order of things, will be worth about half a million dollars.—Lumberman's Gazette.

Notwithstanding the reports of hard times and the distressed condition of business, there never was a time in the history of the country, apparently, when there was so much building going on as at present. Every local journal in the country sings the same tune in regard to this matter.

Fred A. Smith, who has for six years been chief manipulator of mail at this postoffice, resigned his clerkship last week. He has been recommended to the position of cashier in the savings bank, in place of G. S. Thomas (who resigns to engage in other business) but his plans for the future are not fully determined. Young and ambitious blood counts in the upbuilding of a town, consequently we hope to see Fred remain among us.

J. Milo Eaton is running a stage between Charlevoix and Petoskey, starting from Petoskey in the morning, and returning in the afternoon. Those of our citizens who prefer to patronize home industry, now have a chance to give Mr. Eaton a benefit. The stage leaves Petoskey soon after the arrival of the morning train, and those going out on the night train will find the stage to their convenience in the afternoon from here. With Mr. Henry Lake as driver we have no doubt of the care and accommodation of the passengers.

Norwood.

Sleighing passable and quite a number are using it hauling lat blocks for Geo. Van Pelt, and lumber posts and ties for Ganiles & Nash.

The entertainment given last Saturday evening, for the benefit of McCartney, by Miss Cody and others, was not as well attended as it ought to have been, considering the quality. Every one there was highly entertained and pronounced it splendid. The "Fire Bell" piece was a decided success,—we expected every minute to hear the engine and hose cart pass along; "Jack" is a terror to ring the bell.

The dance given under the auspices of the "Norwood Dancing Club," Thanksgiving night, was a success; thirty one numbers being sold, and every person having a good time. There will be another dance the night of the 12th

The Congregational Church Completed.

Last Sunday morning the new Congregational church was occupied for the first time. For several weeks it has been ready for occupancy except the windows, and these came on the Lawrence on Friday.

The services were conducted by the pastor, Rev. C. F. VanAnken, and instead of a sermon, he briefly reviewed the history of the society, and the building.

During the summer of 1883, Mr. VanAnken came here at the request of the American home missionary society. Meetings were held, in which permanent organization and prospects were discussed, and an invitation to become pastor extended to Mr. VanAnken, and accepted by him. Steps were at once taken toward the building of a house of worship. Plans were submitted and accepted, a lot which had been purchased was sold, and a larger and more suitable one purchased, material engaged, and everything done that could be as fast as the means would permit.

Late in the summer of 1883, the work of building was commenced, and the walls were enclosed before winter. But little was done toward completing the inside until this last summer, except to solicit means from every available source.

In the matter of contributions, valuable assistance has been rendered by Olivet College, by visitors at both resort, by various churches and individuals throughout the state, and by generous donations of many of our citizens.

While the building is not large, it is handsome, well finished, and large enough for the needs of the society for a number of years. The church which two years ago numbered only seven souls, has now increased to 34. The society has had a similarly strong, healthy growth, and has the satisfaction of having lived on the pay-as-you-go plan.

In addition to Mr. VanAnken's successful work in Charlevoix, he has done considerable missionary work in the country around. Ironton has a young but ambitious society, and already sighs for a house of worship. Good work has been done at the Ross school house and the society there is pushing forward handsomely having already a membership of over thirty.

At Horton's Bay a lively interest in the work is awakened, and the fruits of his labor is more and more apparent every week. An organization is soon to be effected, a parsonage and house of worship commenced within the coming year.

The outlook is indeed gratifying, when all the circumstances are considered.

The work of laying carpets will be begun this week, the chandelier is expected to be in place, and all the services, morning, evening, and weekly meetings will be held there hereafter.

Historical Society.

The Society met Tuesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. Byron See, that being their last opportunity before the departure of Mr. and Mrs. See for the South. The house was well filled, and the program interesting. After the reading of the minutes, while waiting for members of the Glee Club, Mrs. H. C. Loveday entertained the company with a piano solo. The absent members having arrived, the Glee Club rendered a choice selection. The historical reading of the evening was by Fred W. Mayne, and reviewed the life and times of Solon, the Athenian statesman and reformer, who flourished B. C. 594-559. A trio by Miss Greer and Messrs. Bradfuer and Carlisle, was well received. After an embalmion Mrs. C. M. Clark gave a select reading, and Messrs. Bradfuer and Carlisle rendered a duet. A select reading by A. D. Bradfuer chilled frequent laughter and applause. After another selection by the Glee Club, the Society adjourned, to meet next Tuesday evening with Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Upright.

In order to procure a diploma no less than practice is fatally.

Why is it that our supervisor does not see to the fencing of our cemetery? We are under the impression that two years ago there was money raised for the express purpose of having our cemetery fenced in a proper manner, but by some oversight or negligence it has not been done. We have heard it stated that the job was let, and the parties paid for doing the work, and for humanity's sake let the authorities see to it that our cemetery be in its present condition, where the cattle have had free liberty to roam over the graves, knocking down the railings, headboards, etc.

For the last year there has been a man practicing medicine and officiating here as a physician, without a diploma, which, we believe, is contrary to law, and it should be attended to by the medical fraternity, or some one authorized.

Real Estate Transfers.

NEW CUSTOM

GRIST MILL

Has been put in operation in my Heller Shop building in Mill with a custom grist mill, ready for busy for grinding Wheat, Corn, Buckwheat, Feed, &c. Bring your Grain to me, and I will grind it for you and take it home the same day. Farmers wanting for weighing grain, or that every man may weigh his own grain, will do so. For the present I will charge for full only the amount allowed to mills run by toll dishes. If this mill is well patronized, other improvements will be added until I have a first-class flour mill.

JOS. HYLAND.

Mill east of Charlevoix Mfg Co's building.

N. B.—This does not interfere with Heller's work, which will be continued in the same building. I am ready at all times for first-class fitted iron and Heller work, of all descriptions. Good work with 12 feet of water.

BROWN & CO.

OLD NEWSPAPERS FOR SALE

HER TRUST.

BY LIZA W. CURRY.

It was long ago, a door-yard under
Set in a low-ceiled room;
But viol sang to the twilight gloom,
Over a childish head at rest
Where the sweet June wind
Sang in the birch so cool and mournfuller
Of neighborly love full and strong,
Filling and thrilling my heart day-long.
Almost I see her crown of rare
Silver hair.

"I am rich," said the dear grandmother;
"We are wealthy," and we chose a song
A lace that wondered with eyes of blue;
"Sure my gold," and she scanned the lace,
Fine and late.

It was long ago, that dear grandmother,
Locked and unlocked her old chest
Heard was grip a sulking clasp,
Lifted a lid and saw a dim
Softly-scared;
Prayed in the lands, as could pray none either
Prayed in the lands, and prayed to God,
Divine kinsfolk—the weak soul heard,
Rocked in the haven to save you,
Ye that boast!

"Trust in God!" spoke the dear grandmother,
Tenderly in the gathering gloom,
"Trust in God!" and the low-walled room;
"Made His will," and the sunset wind
Thro' was stained,
By the tread that was sure and grand—none either!

TEDDIE.

BY GEORGIANA FEATHERS-TOMIATCH.

A leaf tinged with scarlet, peeping here and there among the maples as the wind parted the swaying branches. The rustling sound of the grape-vine against the arbor, with its bunches of luscious, half-ripe fruit. The tall note of the cricket, hidden in some friendly crevice, where form, though invisible, makes its presence known by the shrill, almost impatient, chirrup! all were omens of the dying summer, who, as it stepped lightly into the footsteps of the Autumn dead, took no heed of the balmy winds as they whispered their last good-by to the forest.

Come where my love lies dreaming, sang a clear tener voice inside the arbor, and in another instant a tall form was leaning against the doorway and peering curiously within.

"How you frightened me, Teddie."

"Did I pray do excuse me; I really didn't know you were here, Dorothy," he said, leaning his tall form more firmly against the arbor, with an air of having come to stay.

"No, I suppose not," Dorothy replied, "when Aunt Joe informed you that I had gone to the arbor you no doubt pictured me seated upon the rug, and to be sure you were singing, 'come where my love lies dreaming' to that heavy bunch of grapes you so admired the other day."

Teddie blushed. "Well, I will make no confession, but give the grapes the benefit of the doubt; though, if they were ripe I would half believe that you had been indulging too freely, and the effect was they have made you a trifle—sour."

"Sour, I suppose," Dorothy said; "don't be afraid of hurting my feelings. Wiser that paragon of amiability, Ted de Forrester, is around, every one else is cross by contrast."

Teddie hummed the tune he had sung outside of the arbor. "I didn't know you had such a good opinion of me before," he said; "I should have ever heard that grape-juice will make people quite brilliant, when ordinarily they are very commonplace individuals."

"Oh, indeed!" Dorothy replied, leaning her head against the side of the arbor in a weary fashion, and regarding him through her half-closed eyelids; "that accounts for Teddie Forrester's frequent bouts of wit."

Teddie shrugged his shoulders. "I may half-imagine has proved unfortunate for me," he said, breaking off the bunch of grapes he had particularly admired one day, and throwing them one by one at the half-reclining figure of the girl. "After having tramped all the way from Lookout Hotel through the broiling sun, you haven't even had the hospitality to ask me in, or invite me to a seat beside you," the young man said, in a tone half-injured, half-chiding.

Dorothy laughed. "I am familiar enough with your peculiarities to know that, if you desire a thing, you never wait for an invitation or hospitalities to be offered, so you understand why I thought you preferred standing."

Teddie Forrester dropped the demoiled grape-stem and walked leisurely to a seat a few rails from Dorothy. "Do you suppose I would have the temerity to cross the threshold of your aunt's door had she not bidden me do so?" he asked, "or even have eaten the delicious piece of pumpkin pie without her having offered it? but, unlike her niece, she has not the gift of reading my peculiar nature, and she says for an ordinary person, and not willing to dissemblant her, I allowed her to believe me such."

It was a fact which, after much observation, made itself apparent to Dorothy, that next to her own golden pumpkin pies, her Aunt Joe admired Teddie Forrester, though she had frequently been known to pronounce him extravagant, and to be giving himself up wholly to the vanities of the world.

"It is actually the middle of August," Teddie said, abruptly.

"Why do you remind one of things so unpleasant as that the summer is waning, and suggest to one's mind the necessity of wearing their winter cloak another season?" Dorothy said, a trifle disconcerted.

Teddie laughed sardonically. "That will be scarcely necessary if you go on encouraging the Count Von Auer, as you have been doing all the season.

"Is this to be an inter-locutory?" the girl asked, adding her hands together, and watching a patient, listening attitude.

"No, Dorothy," Teddie said, calmly; "but, apropos of the Count, it just reminds me that I have a lot of news from the land, with reference to the Count, you know, home my visit to Maplewood Cottage."

All the weary languor from Dorothy's face quickly vanished, and she opened her grey eyes wide, and looked intently at the speaker, who, being satisfied that he had at last aroused her curiosity with the perversity of his nature asked suddenly, "Will you go to the hop over at the hotel to-night?" A shade of disappointment overspread Dorothy's face. "No," she said, and in a mid-way tone.

It was Teddie's turn now to be disappointed at her reply. He felt that he had been wanting in diplomacy in wandering from his subject.

"Oh, well, he said, "I might have known that the news of the Count's accident had already reached you, therefore your reason for not caring to go to the hop."

"I heard of no accident to the Count," Dorothy returned, lapsing into her old state of weariness, feeling that she had been too eager in her interest when Teddie had mentioned the Count's name.

Teddie elevated his eyebrows, while a strangely guilty expression crept into his face.

"The young nob got a ducking this morning, he said, with assumed indifference; 'he slipped over the side of the yacht, and if it hadn't been for me he might have now reached that sweet by-and-by."

Dorothy gave no demonstration of surprise or regret, for she was unerring in her judgment, and if he had met with no serious an accident, or whether it was but a fabrication of Teddie's, she knew that, if injured, the Count had the day before invited her to a drive behind the spirited horses, which, though the envy and admiration of not a few of the men at the lookout Hotel, were a fear to a less clever driver than the Count. And now the day had advanced for ride the afternoon, still she had received no message from the hotel that the projected drive had been abandoned.

"Then you positively refuse my invitation," Teddie said.

"Positively, this time, Teddie, I do," Dorothy replied, though she withheld her reason, which, if not wholly in ignorance of, Teddie had acted well the part of feigning.

Dorothy was never surprised at Teddie Forrester's tyrannical ways, or the air of proprietorship he was in the habit of assuming toward her; it had always been a well-recognized custom in her ever since she had known him, and she had been so accustomed to it for years, that it was but natural when she had escaped from the hotel city to spend a evening or two at Maplewood Cottage with her Aunt Joe, she had not even surprised to hear, a few weeks later, that Teddie Forrester had taken up his quarters at the Lookout Hotel, Teddie, whose smile force could give him access to any part of the globe he desired, but whose generous allowance of jealous control him to the indifferent accommodation of Lookout Hotel, could by a drive down the dusty but picturesque Cralstree road.

He was jealous of this Count Von Auer, who, through an accident, had found his way to Maplewood Cottage and there first made the acquaintance of Aunt Joe and Dorothy, after which his thoughts were divided between the great cattle ranche in one of the Western Territories, where he spent so months of the year, and the fresh beauty of this naive American girl, while Dorothy did sometimes acknowledge to herself that the Count's deferential ways were often pleasanter than he knew of in Dorothy's presence, but she die.

"No; if the Count does not come, and thinks it not worth his while to send an excuse, I will not go to the hop to please whose I never cared, and I don't really believe I will ever marry him, though I dare say he will appear in Aunt Joe's parlor some of these days with a priest and a ring, and say, 'Dorothy, I have come to marry you,' and I will most likely say, 'Yes, you poet,' because I always say yes to Teddie, in the end, and also to be rid of going back to the city and teaching the 'young idea how to shoot.'"

"There is the Count." And Aunt Joe says that for a foreign nobleman he seems like quite the genuine article, though he is a little vague about the origin of the genealogical tree.

Dorothy was seated upon the front porch, waiting impatiently for the Count to appear down the Cralstree road. "If he should come at all," she thought to herself, "it would be a great disappointment; besides Teddie would so glory in it if he should ever hear!"

The sight of the Count's spirited horses coming down the Cralstree road, raising a cloud of dust in their wake was enough to make the Count himself, made Dorothy's heart beat quickly, and scattered the thoughts of Teddie to the wind.

It certainly was much pleasanter bowling along, if it was only upon Cralstree road, than waiting in the hotel parlor of the hotel with Teddie Forrester, admiring every young woman in the room, but not even hinting that her white dress or the pink rose were becoming.

"Ah, Miss Bassell, you cannot imagine how that bit of rolling land reminds me of my ranch; it only wants an unpretentious house right there, painting with his whip, "and you have the general aspect of my home in the far West."

A little dreary, Dorothy thought, and an Eden scarcely alluring enough wherein to spend six months out of twelve annually.

Dorothy heard the Count's voice in her ears, when to her sensual to have grown painfully nettler of fact, but his words came to her indistinct and far away, for her thoughts had flown back to Teddie Forrester, and she wondered what young woman at the hotel he was favoring with the good graces of her of waltzes.

A rumbling of wheels caught Dorothy's ear; somebody was coming, quickly behind Alben, and in a moment a village cart stood before her, and was seated Teddie. Teddie in an unmarked evening toilet, and an injured expression upon his face, which changed in an opposite direction.

As Dorothy met her companion's look alarmed, the Count quite unconscious of the tragedy going on before him, and Dorothy almost crushed by the heartless conduct of Teddie, a vivid flash of lightning caused the three startled and made to plunge suddenly forward.

Dorothy and the Count glanced behind them, and perceived that the small dark cloud that had lurked in evil in the early evening had gradually become a mass of black clouds hurled up in the west, and now completely overspreading the heavens.

The Count turned the horses' heads further on was a cold stretch of country, containing no habitation in which to find shelter, and ere they had gone three the storm broke was their only alternative.

Dorothy shuddered as she drew her light shawl around her and glanced uneasily at the lowering clouds, that seemed almost to touch the earth.

The day had been warm without warning, precipitated into night, and the irregular row of trees upon the Cralstree road were bending and swaying in wild confusion as the wind poured through them. Suddenly, as now the clouds, so long threatening, poured down their torrents upon the earth.

A sudden flash of lightning, which lit up the black and jagged rim of clouds, shone in the moisture like that had been forced by a depression in the coal, and the thoroughly frightened animals, startled into a run for by the pinching and lashing of the whip, and the Count's principal member of the party, and I was powerless to compete with the strength of the two horses as a straw to withstand the force of a whirlwind.

"Jump!" he cried, throwing the reins from him. "The earth is soft and there will be no danger in jumping the risk of being dashed to pieces."

Dorothy turned to look short her, when she saw the Count spring from the seat upon the road and disappear in the darkness, while she alone, was borne rapidly onward over the turnpike, flying from side to side beneath her.

Something had happened, she knew, for the horses were ungovernable, and force upon the ground, and she knew no more.

When she returned to consciousness she was again riding along Cralstree road, but the rain had ceased, and a star or two shone above, some one was holding her very firmly, and her head was rolling in a ridiculous fashion upon some companion's shoulder, by the jolting of the village cart.

Dorothy looked up.

"Thank heaven you are not killed outright!" Teddie said, with an unmistakable prayer in his voice. "Then it at least your eyes were broken when I lifted you up."

Dorothy struggled out that member quite firmly.

"No, Teddie," she said, "not my arm, but my heart, because when you passed me this evening you turned your head the other way."

Teddie smiled and felt comforted, for he knew that Dorothy had not been seriously injured in any way.

Years after, sauntering through one of the streets of New York, his attention of Teddie Forrester and his wife, Dorothy, was attracted by a man very hoisting a dancing bear to the populace. A half-derisive laugh from some one standing in a group caught their glance around.

"Do you see that man with the bear? the man who had laughed asks his companion. "Well, years ago he was the owner of my ranch over in one of the Territories, and, while I was on a visit to Paris, he ruined one of my best span of horses, killing one outright and maiming the other, while playing the role of a foreign Count on a small water up-place.

Teddie Forrester and his wife pressed forward to scan the features of the owner of the bear, a well-lured of surprise, mount joined from Teddie's lips, while a curious glow of mortification dyed Dorothy's face. It was the Count Von Auer.

Our Old Friend Jesse.

Every day while at Trouville I saw a showy lady of most conspicuous proportions and gorgeously arrayed in a Parisian, diamond-cut in a carriage, victoria or showy gliding along like a frigate under full sail through the crowded streets. Everybody knew her, for she was a most look-after-able person. I could not tell who she was, but her to be an American unless her dress or her chaperon-courier, for she was a vivid brunette, such as one sees a thousand times oftener in France than in the Unit ' States, or a her heavily powdered complexion tend no tides of military anywhere between Chicago and Pulaucico. Upon inquiry, I was told that she was a Cuban widow, immensely rich and staying at the Roche Noires. One day she sailed past upon his bench as I sat there in company with a certain New York ornamental lawyer. I called his attention to the showy Cuban widow. "Cuban!" he exclaimed, in startled astonishment. "Why, that is the Tid Stokes and Jim Fisk's widow, Josie Mansfield."—Paris Letter.

RUSSIAN MARRIAGE CUSTOMS.

A Social Barbarism of the Country of the Northern Bear.

A Russian lady, writes to us, whether it is "the duty of a lassie to kiss her lover on New Year's day." Not on New Year's day, Miss Jessie, but on the eve of the Russian Christmas, and, in spite of the prevalence of the custom, it is all much the women were treated in Russia, and, as I understand, in Poland, and, except in the case of peasants, and serfs, an almost Oriental contempt was their lot. A husband might beat his wife at his pleasure, and even if she died under his hand the criminal was fined to teach him. The wife, on the other hand, who might be goaded to his cruelty to the murder of her husband, was ruthlessly hurried alive.

What our travelers reported of the method employed to select wives for the czar affords further illustration of the backwardness of Muscovite civilization in that century. Instead of seeking suitable alliances with foreign courts, or among the noble families at home, the Czar would, when a czar was to be married, to issue a proclamation inviting all marriageable girls of the empire between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five to present themselves at Moscow on a given day for the czar's Majesty's inspection, and after a careful scrutiny of the hundreds of fair candidates for the great matrimonial prize, the royal choice was announced to the nation.

But there was still room for the proverbial slip between the cup and the lip. Disappointed lovers were not a few, and the Czar's principal member of the imperial family was a widower noticed for when she brought to the refreshments, fell to have with him, and offered a home one, it happened that a proclamation had been already issued, summoning candidates for the Czar's hand to present themselves at Moscow for his inspection and choice; and at Malvern's entrance, to give less trouble for jealous intrigues and conspiracy, the girl was compelled to present herself with the rest, and appear to take her chance among them. The experiment was a failure of success. As soon as the royal selection was known, every engine was set in motion to render it abortive. Her guardians were accused of bewitching the Czar with magic and sorcery, a long investigation followed, carried on, as usual, by the Czar himself, and sentence of banishment was passed on all concerned, and nine months elapsed before the intriguers were bailed and the marriage was consummated.—New York Home Journal.

Sentinels in Russia.

Thirty miles from St. Petersburg is the castle of Ismaelitsa. It has four sides (here voluntarily, similar to those of the Bastile of Paris) and a subterranean passage leads from the castle to the stables, where are many horses kept ready for use, when a czar wants to be married, to issue a proclamation inviting all marriageable girls of the empire between the ages of sixteen and twenty-five to present themselves at Moscow on a given day for the czar's inspection, and after a careful scrutiny of the hundreds of fair candidates for the great matrimonial prize, the royal choice was announced to the nation.

What is Mind?

Go into the chemical laboratory and touch the two poles of a galvanic battery. What is it that thrills through your bodies, and perhaps even burns the skin of your fingers? or, even, if the current be strong enough, it lies you dead on the instant? Galvanism. What is galvanism? A force. Yes, but a force of what? Of mind, mind, mind, that which I am and that I am. Is it not a force which I can control? Yes, I can control it. Still, some jumper, I'm sure, I'm sure, I'm sure

Are we a Political Party.

Among the many unfounded charges that have been made against the W. C. T. U. since its organization none are more absurd than the chief accusation of the present time, that it has become a political party. This charge is based upon the action of the St. Louis convention, wherein the duly elected representatives of the various state and local unions of the country resolved to lend their influence to that national political organization which declares in its platform for prohibition and home protection.

It would seem to the uninitiated, and we claim to be still uninitiated in political craftiness, that a political party must be made up of something more tangible than "full sauce." Political parties have died and worm-fodder eaten them, but not from "influ ence" unsupported by votes.

Let us see how resolutions operate in other bodies than our own. For instance, the Congregational Ministers Union of this city early in October passed the following resolution with about the same proportionate majority as that adopted at the St. Louis convention:

Resolved, That for the sake of the south, for the sake of temperance, for the sake of temperance and religious liberty, and for the sake of the family and the reform against intemperance, we hail with joy the Prohibition party, and we pledge our influence and votes to the support of the Prohibition party.

The fairest possible inference is that this body of ministers thereby agreed to lend not only their influence, but their votes, to this "necessity of the hour."

If such action render the Congregational Ministers Union a political party,

The Rock River conference of the M. E. church, on the other hand passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, First, we distinctly recognize, and cordially acknowledge the efficiency and disinterestedness of the W. C. T. U., and we assure them that they have increased access to its patriotic and pious endeavors for the good home and native land; and we heartily endorse its noble purpose, expressed in the "Home Protection" and "Prohibition" petitions, by whatever name applied, which shall secure the best embodiment of prohibition principles, and will most surely protect our homes.

Did such endorsement of our enforcement make the Rock River conference a political party?

Again, several Iowa conferences of the same church declared by resolution to stand by, and vote for the temperance party. Again we ask, did such declaration of purpose and intention to act, convert those religious bodies into a political party?

Forty years ago large numbers of the Methodist Episcopal church of the United States believed so strongly that human slavery was a sin, that the highest council was compelled to declare against the slave holder as a member of this great church. Have it causing division of the church, and leading out and influence to the then crystallizing party of freedom. Never was it written among men that this decisive and revolutionary act convicted the M. E. church in the northern states into a political party.

History and common sense unite in the verdict that the charge against the W. C. T. U. is a foolish one. We shall pay no further heed to it, assured a steadfast non-observance of all disgraceful things said and done while we work on as heretofore, singing to all gainsayers that if we are a political party, which we are certainly not, it is such a one as the world never saw before, one that has for its motto: "All the world for Christ and Temperance."—Union Signal.

An Old Story of Daniel Webster.

Every one who has read George Tickner Curtis' "Life of Daniel Webster" will remember John Taylor, Mr. Webster's tenant and factotum at Franklin, N. H., and Robert Wise, the old revolutionary soldier who came home from the war with Capt. Ebenezer Webster, Mr. Webster's father, and built for himself a little cottage on one corner of the Webster farm, where he lived and died. Skirting the Webster property, and passing by the spot where Robert Wise took up his humble abode, there had long been a ferry-way, leading to a ferry across the Merrimac river. The ferry was established during the last century, and after Robert Wise had lived there for some time it came to be called Wise's Ferry. The ferry-way was originally fenced on both sides, and it ran between the Webster farm and a farm belonging at the time of which we are about to speak, to Deacon Farley. The fence on Webster's side of the ferry-way had been allowed to fall into decay, but the fence on the Farley side had been well kept up. In the year 1828, after a bridge had been built across the river, this town voted to discontinue the ferry-way and the ferry, and the land reverted, of course, to the original owner, Deacon Farley, assuming that the land belonged to himself, removed all traces of the fence on his own side, and inclosed the whole of the land in his own territory up to the line where the Webster fence formerly stood.

Mr. Webster came up to Franklin soon after this had been done and very greatly incensed by what he saw. He ordered John Taylor into his sitting-room and said to him sternly: "John Taylor, how came you to stand still and let Deacon Farley steal my land?" Mr. Webster was in one of his blackest moods. Poor Taylor was frightened, for in all his life he had never seen his great friend in such a towering passion. Mr. Webster ordered him, in tones of thunder, to bring Deacon Farley.

The deacon came, and he, too, was painted with a burst of wrath that made him tremble. He modestly replied that he believed the land was his, but Mr. Webster could not be pacified.

Thereupon the deacon and John Taylor jumped into a wagon and drove in great alarm to see a young lawyer by the name of Pike (now Senator in Congress from New Hampshire), who lived two and a half miles up the river. They told Pike he must go down and see Mr. Webster and explain the matter.

Pike went, but as soon as he was in Mr. Webster's presence the latter roared out: "Young man, did you advise Deacon Farley to steal my land?"

"No, sir," said Pike, "I did not, but if the statements that were laid before me are true, the land belongs to the deacon."

"Well, sir," replied Webster, "if I can find a lawyer in this county, I shall bring an action."

"There is no need of that, Mr. Webster," said Pike "I will get the proper documents, and submit them to you, if you will hear me, and I believe that you will be convinced that the land is not yours."

"You are a bold man, sir, if you propose to leave the case to me," said Mr. Webster. "But do as you please. I give you fair warning that I consider this land mine, and I will fight for every inch of my father's property."

Pike went away and procured a copy of the record which showed the laying out of the ferry-way, and that all the land was taken from the property of Farley's grantor, and none of it from the Webster property, a copy of the vote of the town discontinuing the ferry, and an affidavit of a former tenant of Webster's, showing that the fence on the Webster side had been removed, and the whole ferry-way taken into the Webster field. The strip of land which was discontinued as the ferry-way took off from what Mr. Webster had already regarded as his own property extended the whole length of one of his best fields.

When Pike submitted the documents to Mr. Webster, the latter read them very carefully, and then said: "Mr. Pike, in half an hour the jury will be ready to render their verdict. Go and get Deacon Farley, that he may hear it."

In half an hour Pike returned with the deacon, who expected nothing but "Gentlemen," said Mr. Webster, "hearken to the verdict. The jury find that the land is Deacon Farley's and is not the land of Daniel Webster. So have the jury to have his swing. After he has sown his wild oats, the young man not infrequently settles down into a solid, good-natured and thoroughgoing business man. He then affects the blase air of a man who has seen everything in the world and gives fatherly advice to other young men who are endeavoring to spend large incomes after the manner which he affected. These young apprentices are commonly the most agreeable men in the world. Once in a while you will find one who is puffed up at his own importance, but, as a rule, he has the good nature of a high liver.—Letter to San Francisco Argonaut.

An Australian Intoxicant.

Their own stimulant, kava, they continue to use in great quantities, and many of the Europeans have contracted a liking for it. All the Wairapans have a taste of it, and marvel that any white man can acquire a penchant for such stuff. Its flavor resembles soap suds more than anything else one can compare it with. The root used is botanically known as that of the piper methisticum; it is hard and woody, hence the object of the chewing, which liberates the juices of the root more freely than any other process. Europeans grate the root and pound it, but adult that the liquor is not equal to the chewed. In Samoa the preparation of the kava bowl is attended with very great ceremony, only the young unmarried girls being allowed to chew it. The root is cut up into fine pieces, and the girls, who are directed by the prettiest of them, first rinse their mouths, take up a piece, and when sufficiently masticated and formed into a ball, spit it into the bowl. The chief girl then calls for water, and after washing her hands directs one of her companions to pour on the water while she stirs the root with her hand. When enough water is in, and the balls are properly mixed with the ingredient, she takes up a strainer made of fibres of the hibiscus, and passes it from side to side of the bowl. When the strainer is saturated she lifts it high above the bowl and squeezes the balls through the strainer in her hand. This is continued until the kava bowl is ready. It is contended by some of the Europeans who use chewed root that the mastication is perfectly dry and is a mere crushing process, but of course an amount of saliva must get incorporated in the process. The medicinal properties of kava are tonic and nervous sedative, and it is to these effects, and not to its flavor, that the taste for the drink arises.—Melbourne Leader.

New York's Bad Young Man.

Another man who is often met is the younger son of a wealthy widow or a careless father, who is allowed $10,000 or $15,000 for pin-money, besides the debts which he manages to contract with his tailor and florist. The specimen very often gets into the papers, has numerous intrigues with actresses, considers himself a frightfully wicked specimen of humanity when he succeeds in luring some woman of the stage off to supper, and cultivates round shoulders and a wearied, exhausted and dissipated expression. He drinks absinthe cocktails, talks continually about women, and passes with the younger members of his sex as an awfully bad man. It is not infrequently the case that this youthful—there are a great many of the kind in New York—imagines himself very much more depraved and wicked than he really is. His father usually knows which way the wind is blowing, and allows the boy to have his swing. After he has sown his wild oats, the young man not infrequently settles down into a solid, good-natured and thoroughgoing business man. He then affects the blase air of a man who has seen everything in the world and gives fatherly advice to other young men who are endeavoring to spend large incomes after the manner which he affected. These young apprentices are commonly the most agreeable men in the world. Once in a while you will find one who is puffed up at his own importance, but, as a rule, he has the good nature of a high liver.—Letter to San Francisco Argonaut.

Since the close of your last session, the American people, in the exercise of their highest right and duty, have chosen a Chief Magistrate for the four years coming. When it is remembered that at no previous period in our history has the long period elapsed which customarily precedes the day of the national election been waged with greater fervor and intensity, it is a subject of congratulation that after the conflict of opinion which has been so widely spread and so earnestly prosecuted, the election has been determined, was so peaceably held, and the result so quickly and quietly accepted as the expression of the will of the people. Such a result could not have been reached if the great body of our citizens had not been satisfied that, whatever of real importance to them had been involved in the issue, no material interest had been in jeopardy through the election of any one of the candidates who had been presented for the suffrage

Rev. John M. Arnold, D. D., manager of the Michigan Christian Advocate publishing house, of Detroit, and widely known throughout Michigan and the northwest, died very suddenly of heart disease about 2:30 o'clock Friday afternoon at his home, corner of Fourth and Selden avenue. He had not complained of feeling unwell, and attended to business during the day, apparently in his usual health and spirits. Fifteen minutes after returning home he suddenly fell and died almost immediately. Dr. Carriaw was sent for, but could do nothing.

Mr. Robinson (New York) has prepared a characteristic resolution for a return to Jeffersonian simplicity in the ceremonies attending the inauguration. It provides that there shall be permitted no display of bayonets or other arms on that occasion, and there shall be no decorations or display other than the American flag, and the chief justice of the supreme court and the president-elect shall walk or ride to the capitol together in a carriage, drawn by not more than two horses, and without any display of livery, where the oath of office shall be administered in the presence of all who desire to be present.

The Harbor Springs Independent says that Capt. Cryeler will have the upper works of the Gracie Barker remodeled this winter. She will have her upper deck extended forward, and the space forward of the boiler room will be housed in. This will give her much better accommodations for carrying freight, and will increase her sees going qualities. The pilot house will be raised to the upper deck, which will be strengthened and arranged for the accommodation of passengers in fair weather. The upper deck will be protected by rope bulwarks similar to those on the Friant. If the contemplated changes are made by good workmen the appearance of the Barker will be materially improved.

The editor of the Petoskey Record labors through a half column of discussion of the question of southern control of democracy, and sums it up by saying "still it is a matter of opinion." It is not wholly a matter of opinion. The South are not all fools. They know well enough that the democracy of the north will not permit the overthrow of the government in the manner set up by the Record. They know that the democracy of the north is loyal, and will vote regardless of party name to destroy any hydra that may arise. We trust that President Cleveland will represent the independent element in Congress which stands as the balance of power. If he does he will only carry out the principles on which he was elected, that of progress and reform. If he does not, he will betray the party which elected him to the important office of chief executive of sixty millions of free people.

HOLIDAY GOODS.

A Glance at the Stock of Dr. W. Crouter.

The times are never so hard that people cannot or will not buy presents for Christmas. Of course when money is scarce, as it is this winter, the tendency is to invest more in useful or necessary goods than in the purely ornamental.

Anticipating the "times," Dr. Crouter made his selections this year to combine the useful and ornamental in a large variety of articles. His goods include Bibles in rich and elegant covers, finely illustrated poems in alligator covers (the latest designs), juvenile books from the richest to the cheapest, as well as a large line of standard literature. In albums, the large stock embraces a wide range in quality and prices. Rich and elegant perfume cases with cut glass bottles, make no small part of the display. Plush goods, in toilet cases, mirrors, broom holders, etc., fill one case with samples. Solid white and colored glass paper weights; china goods, in bread and milk, and water sets; vases; a fine assortment of writing desks, and many other just such articles combine the useful and ornamental in a noticeable degree. In the stock may be found all the latest and leading games, and as large a line of wax, indestructible, and other dolls as was ever brought to Charlevoix. Christmas cards may be classed as almost purely ornamental, but this stock includes the richest and latest designs. Notwithstanding the "times" the Doctor says some of his best cards are already sold. People of artistic tastes should not fail to look them over. In toys the mammoth "Christmas tree" in the center of the store contains everything for the little folks, in value from one cent to one dollar. The store contains numberless other articles not here named, suitable for holiday presents. In addition to the goods in stock, he has made several orders of rich and expensive goods for people who are able to buy,—goods too expensive to keep in stock for the trade of this county. This he is enabled to do with the aid of his very complete catalogues from wholesale houses in Chicago and other large cities.

While the trade may not aggregate as much as in some previous years, it has been very satisfactory, and Dr. Crouter will be quite sure to get his share of what is going.

American Shipping.

Considerable importance is attached to a resolution which Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania, has introduced to Congress, and intends to call up at the first opportunity. It reads:

WHEREAS, The shipping trade in American vessels is depressed, and the capital invested in American produce languishing for want of a market that might be reached if the shipping trade was in the hands of citizens of the United States; therefore,

Resolved, That the committee on finance be and is hereby directed to inquire whether it be expedient to expend the surplus revenue of the United States, or any portion thereof, for the purpose of reviving the export trade, by allowing a rebate from tariff duties on foreign goods imported in ships built and owned in the United States, and by also allowing a premium on American grown products and articles of American manufacture exported in American vessels, and report by bill or otherwise.

From the Michigan Tradesman.

Cogent Reasons for Pharmaceutical Legislation.

President Crouter presents the following concise reasons for the enactment of a pharmacy bill:

To the Editor of the Tradesman:

MY DEAR SIR—Allow me to extend to you the thanks of the Michigan State Pharmaceutical Association for your kind and very liberal offer of the free use of the columns of your excellent journal to discuss any matter pertaining to the welfare of the druggists and other citizens of this state.

We have a pharmacy bill to present to our next legislature—one that demands the attention of every citizen of the state.

It is a bill for the protection of the public from the dangers attending the dispensing of medicines by unlicensed and incompetent men.

It is a bill that requires every druggist to educate himself for the important position of compounding medicines for the people.

It is a bill requiring all druggists to keep a careful record of the poisons they sell, and to see that every parcel of poison sold is properly labeled.

It is a bill to prevent the adulteration of any drug, medicine, chemical or pharmaceutical preparation.

It is not a bill in the interest of any class or profession of men.

It is a bill endorsed by our state school of pharmacy and in my opinion is one of the most important bills the people of our state that will be passed upon by our next legislature.

Our state has provided a school to educate druggists, and now let the people require every person to be educated before attempting to dispense poison to the public and dealing with human life.

Yours truly,

G. W. CROUTER.

Mrs. Albert Smith died on Tuesday morning and was buried on Thursday from the Methodist house. Mrs. Smith was a daughter of J. Chamberlain, of Banks, and was an honored of this township. A mourning locket and fine cushion, besides letter, sister and brothers, are left. She was a member of the Baptist church.

Mr. Robert Gregg, of this township, who has been in ill health for a number of years, was at Ann Arbor recently for treatment. Reports are set in, and he died there Dec. 5. His sister Willie was informed by telegram of his proceeding death, and immediately took leaving three two hours before his death. He was brought home for burial. Funeral services at his late residence Dec. 6th. He leaves a wife and three children.

Another family circle was broken on Dec. 10, by the death of Mr. Joseph Stewart, after a long illness. Funeral services at the family residence on Sunday, which was well attended. Rev. J. Hackett officiated at this and the other house views here mentioned. A son and daughter Mr. Stewart came from abroad to see his father last illness.

Historical Society.

The regular meeting of the Society was held in the residence of A. H. Upright on Tuesday evening last, the pleasant parlors being all filled with members of the Society, who enjoyed a pleasant evening besides listening to a well-prepared program. President E. H. Gross being absent, vice president, C. V. Cook presided. Minutes of previous meeting read and approved. Instrumental duet by Mrs. F. A. Smith and Mrs. O. H. Wood, after which Dr. Preston was called upon for the paper of the evening, his subject being "Hahnemann." Dr. Preston reviewed the life of the founder of homeopathy in an interesting manner. Miss Carrie Rice rendered a vocal solo which the audience were highly delighted with. After an intermission of a few minutes, Mrs. H. W. Kane entertained the Society with an instrumental solo, which was well received. The select readings by A. T. Washburn and Mrs. Libbie Hall were also interesting, the latter also played an instrumental solo. Mr. B. Lord's siings there gave a select reading which the society were highly pleased with, after which J. F. Bradbeer and Dr. Carbiette sang a duet. The meeting was business in character, the Society went by motion adjourned. After adjournment, a large number gathered together in the commodious parlor and indulged in a sport entitled "Fish, Flesh, or Fowl," all taking a fishy name. Next meeting of the Society to be held with Mr. and Mrs. Robert Miller at the Lodge Street House, December 18th.

Burgess.

School closed for one week in district No. 6 on account of diphtheria. Six cases in our family.

Charlotte Cook intends trading the lions for a yoke of oxen.

Rev. C. F. Van Auken preaches at Clifton school house every other Tuesday evening.

The inhabitants of Hayes need a telephone station at Burgess.

There are rumors of a skin being taken off from school district No. 4, and entered in district No. 1.

Alex Ross, of section 22, 36 building an addition to his residence, and Abel Ross on side road, is building an addition to his barn. Indications of thrift and prosperity.

A serious accident occurred at Peter Eaton's last Wednesday. Their youngest child, about two years old, was playing on stairs, and fell through the floor where a board had been cut out over the stove, striking the stove and falling to the floor. One hand was badly burned, and the face and head bruised.

The family of I. S. Webster have nearly all recovered from the diphtheria.

The sleighing which nearly disappeared last Saturday is gradually improving.

Ironton.

A Hog I've gone to Chicago.

Preaching Sunday morning at the new church by Rev. Mr. Wood, who is stationed here.

The new house of worship w'. be dedicated Dec. 23d. A general attendance is expected.

The saw mill at Ironton is to be run this winter by Ironton lumber manufacturers.

The telephone line at last reached the town of our great city. We can now talk with other commercial towns.

Quarterly meeting next Saturday and Sunday at the new church.

Geo. W. Crouter's new drug store is now ready for the drugs, etc.

Mrs. Hosner's house is re-shingled, and looks as if it would last for some time, and a chimney has been built in its place. The chimney looking so bad about it the wood-yard will be turned to the same street.

Change of Base.

Charlevoix, December 8, 1884.

EDITOR JOURNAL:—I'm assuming to notice the tearing down of the Charlevoix Sentinel since the election of Mr. Cleveland. Please note. The sentinel does not take notice of small things; is not given to malice or jealousy. No, I see it isn't, since Blaine fell 1487 short—but that's only one dear,—and it's a great comfort to know that editors were kicked out of line by large majorities. Yes, the W. P. T. U. feel proud of their work, regardless of the exclamations the Sentinel and man feels at their progress. Yes, they are encouraged. Does long since the Sentinel has got believed that a Pandora's box of evils, by the election of Mr. Cleveland, would come with our national debts, rebel claims allowed, or rebels pensioned. No, the Sentinel don't believe it possible with Grover Cleveland in the chair. It has a higher aim, of course it always has. For, editors who in the pursuit journalism fields come in with his visible form be speaks various language of Balaam's campaign, for when thoughts of the left other hour of republican reign come like a blight over his spirit, and sad images of democracy reign in the pandemic, go forth under the open sky and link to nature's teachings, while from all around Michigan and New York, and the depth of love comes a still voice, "Fredonia." Yet in a few days the 20,000 supporters, and seven satisfactory republicanism shall give time to assist in all thy beauty. Now in the empire of the W. C. T. U. shall exist the image. The republican party that nourished their shall come thy growth to be rendered to them again. So that when thy summons comes to join the immortal throng of defeated republicans where each shall take his place in private duty, being sustained by an unflattering trust, appreciation thy fate, and wear thy high license crown around thee and lie down to fitful dreams.

A Shakspearean Sentence Explained.

Back to Copenhagen. But never can a pen of mine describe the agonies of getting back. The State railroad of Denmark was unequal to the task of transporting 15,000 people, and the passengers had sometimes to wait two hours before getting a train, although they ran every fifteen minutes. You all were so patient and uncomplaining that it was a perfect revelation to an American. No a word or murmur was heard from even women who stood with children on their arms. Meanwhile an American railroad, in the person of its accredited representatives, waxed wroth. "If we dared to do anything like this," said the European visitor, "the people would mob us, and they would be right. This comes of centuries of endurance! They'd better import an American railway," and so on to the end of the chapter. It availed nothing. Completely fagged out we finally reached Copenhagen. On the way home I was suddenly aroused from my lethargy. I built a smell. It was a strong smell. One that was richer than any of the hundred smells in Cologne, and stronger than any to be found in Naples. It came from a Danish cheese store. They have very many cheese stores here, and each smells worse than the other. It brought back to memory Shakspeare's famous description of a Copenhagen cheese factory:

"Something is rotten in the State of Denmark."

This is the "something" referred to, and the description is quite correct.

What He Remarked.

He was a particularly hard-up debtor, at least, one from whom it was difficult to collect anything. One day his long-suffering creditors sent a new clerk to dun him, not with much hopes of success, however. In due time the collector returned.

"Well," said the employer, "did you get the money?"

"No, but he promised to pay at once."

"He's always promising, but he never gives a dun."

"This time he did—he said to come around Tuesday next at 11 o'clock and he'd give me the money."

"He did? Did he say anything else?"

"Yes, sir. O, yes, he did. As I was coming out he said something about a pig's eye," 'over the left'—but the remark seemed to be utterly irrelevant."—Drake's Magazine.

A Strange Experience.

"I had a strange experience on Saturday," said a young man who is connected with one of the largest tobacco establishments in the city to a reporter of the American recently. "I was struck by lightning, and didn't know it—struck by a piece of thunderbolt, and never knew what hit me. I was at my desk at the store working like a Turk, getting the books in shape. You remember how the rain came down, and how bright the lightning was for a few minutes. The back door was open, and there was quite a draft in the room, so the cool air felt very pleasant. All of a sudden that unusually sharp flash of lightning came. I felt a sharp smack just over my right eye, as if something had hit me, or, perhaps better, as if a bee or wasp had lit there for a second and stung me. It naturally scared me, and I jumped from my seat and looked around in rather a dazed manner, trying to think what had happened. One of the members of the firm, who had been partially blinded by the flash, saw me start, and called out to me to know what was the matter. I could give no explanation at first, but finally explained to him that I had felt a sharp smack upon the forehead. He looked, and, sure enough, there he found a bright red mark, which appeared as if it had been made by a sharp rap with the end of a ruler. He then told me that he had felt a shock himself, and, more than that, he had seen the lightning playing in the store, making, as it were, a passage from the front door through the back. I examined the mark on my forehead afterward, but could discover nothing peculiar about it. There was a slight pain for a while, but it soon passed away, and an hour afterward there was not a sign of the mark left. I am confident I was struck by lightning, but I believe I am probably the luckiest man who ever had that misfortune. I believe in the adage that lightning never strikes twice in the same place, and shall occupy that seat at my desk with a greater sense of security than I ever possessed before."

"And there was no noise about it—nothing like a smash?"

"Not a "smash."—Baltimore American.

Labor and Longevity.

Ericsson, the veteran inventor, was 81 years old recently. He is in excellent health, and works, it is said, sixteen hours a day, proving an exception to the general rule, like many others that are received without question, is a fallacy. Perhaps it might be fairly asserted that busy men live longer than idlers; that work is, after all, the true elixir of life. Many noteworthy instances where longevity coincides with remarkable mental activity will easily occur to the reader.

Was not Sophocles more than 90 when, to prove that he was not in his dotage—as his heirs claimed, in order to get his money—he wrote one of his greatest tragedies? Did not Humboldt do more work at fourscore than many bright men do at forty? Goethe, as every one knows, died without a fever in bed at the age of 82. Von Ranke, the foremost of living historians, has just published another volume of his Universal History; he will be 89 years next December. Carlyle and Emerson lost none of their vigor until they reached three-score years and ten.

And to-day, who imagines that Oliver Wendell Holmes, already on the verge of 75, is old? Longfellow did not perhaps better, as if a bee or wasp had lit there for a second and stung me. It naturally scared me, and I jumped from my seat and looked around in rather a dazed manner, trying to think what had happened. One of the members of the firm, who had been partially blinded by the flash, saw me start, and called out to me to know what was the matter. THE NEWS.

Intelligence by Wire from All the World.

FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS.

The annual session of the Forty-eighth Congress opened at Washington on Monday, Dec. 1. Prayer was offered by the chaplain of the Senate called that lively to order, prayer was offered, and word was sent over to the House that the upper house was ready to proceed to business. Messrs. Sherman and Garland were appointed a committee to inform the President that Congress was ready to receive his communication. Nothing of moment was done in the House beyond the presentation of a bill to prohibit discriminations being made in the military service of the United States against any class of American citizens; also, to enable officers of the army, promoted for gallantry in actual service, to receive pay of the office, rank and full pay of the grade to which they were promoted. Mr. Dawes presented a bill to prevent the electoral vote of any state from being counted when the same never took part in the election for purpose of voting. Mr. Ingalls offered a resolution to the effect that, in reporting the Committee on Public Lands to report such legislation as is necessary to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to summarily remove all fences, whether constructed of wire or other material, which encroach on the public domain, which was referred and ordered printed. The Speaker's chair rapped the House to order promptly at noon. The roll-call showed the presence of 322 members, and Hon. Thomas B. Reed rose to inform the Senate that the House was ready for business. The Speaker then announced Messrs. Randall and Cox, of New York, a committee to wait upon the President to inform him of the fact and to inquire from the Senate and inform him that the House is ready to receive a communication to be made by the President. Mr. Hewitt presented the credentials of Mr. Hewitt, member of the Thirteenth District of Illinois, succeed Mr. Cullom, resigned, and the gentleman took the oath of office. After listening to the reading of the President's message, the House stood to adjourn.

Mr. Vest offered a resolution in the Senate, on the 3d inst., directing an investigation into all the leases of land in Indian Territory by Indian tribes. Alvra Ing long debate followed the same went over. Mr. Hawley introduced a bill appropriating quite a large sum for the relief of the officers and crew of the wrecked Tallapoosa, and Mr. Morgan introduced a resolution presented by Mr. Edmunds, asking for an investigation into the conduct of Lot Wright, marshal at Cincinnati, and his arrest deputies at the October election. Mr. Beasom offered a resolution of Committee's Interstate Commerce Committee, and offered as a substitute what is known as the Cullom bill, which Senator Beasom entered into an exhaustive comparison of the two measures, attacking as the special merits of the substitute the facts that it prohibits a greater charge for transporting a ton of freight a given distance than for transporting it a greater distance, and equitable and prompt remedy shall be given for every injury inflicted on him by the railroads; and that it absolutely prohibits pooling. Instead of merely directing the commission to inquire into the method of pooling and report to Congress, it makes pooling illegal and void. Action on the pooling substitute was deferred by the adjournment.

A motion to suspend the coinage of the silver dollar, and providing that there shall be no issue of United States notes or a denomination less than $5, was introduced in the House on the 3d inst., by Mr. McPherson, of New Jersey. Mr. Randall, from the Committee on Appropriations, presented the appropriation bill for the navy. Mr. Vest's resolution calling for investigation into the leases of land made by Indians in Indian Territory was amended so as to include within the inquiry all leases of the lessees of lands in all Indian reservations. The resolution was then agreed to. Mr. Slater gave notice of his intention to take up the bill for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the Tallapoosa, in connection with the Oregon United Railroad. The Senate went into executive session, and, on coming out, Mr. Morgan, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported back the resolution of Senator Frye, of Maine, relative to the Panama Railroad. The House went into committee of the whole on the Navy Appropriation bill, and, after a long debate, the committee rose without having disposed of the bill. Mr. Randall stated that the appropriations for the support of the navy for the current fiscal year was $14,000,000, a reduction of $2,250,000 on last year's appropriation. The bill was passed without amendment. Considerable portion of the remainder of the session was spent in the consideration of the Deficiency Deficiency, supported the bill. He thought Congress should be slow to interfere with the trade laws. Mr. Long, of Massachusetts, said the Republicans in the Interstate Commerce Committee never Votes approved of the bill because it provided against the prevention of wrongs by railroad companies by unreasonable freight charges.

GENERAL.

—London dispatch: "Family Pride quotes from private letters from officials in India, stating there is a dangerous condition of affairs in that country. The feelings of the natives were secretly excited against England as at the present time, and foreign emissaries are at work among the natives stirring them up to strife, and preparing them to make an explosion. Officers in high command have been sent to England with urgent demands for authority to form camps of refuge for women and children, in order to be ready in case of mutiny. The Government has been warned it is on the eve of a great riot."

—Consul General Cramer in a statement to the State Department says the success of wheat stored in Russia leave little doubt that Russian wheat will supersede that of America in Switzerland and South Germany.

—The publication of a series of letters in the North German Gazette, dated Cape Town, urging Germany to annex territory hitherto occupied by England in Africa, has created a great sensation in England.

—The French Senate has passed a bill abolishing all public executions in future.

—Gladstone presented the redistribution bill in the Commons. England will have six additional and Scotland twelve additional members. Wales and Ireland are unchanged. The large cities of England have eighty-one additional members.

—At a meeting of the conservative members of the British Parliament, the Marquis of Salisbury stated that the redistribution bill would confer franchise on two million citizens who are most possible disturbance of the electoral system. It was agreed to defer discussion of the measure until after the second reading.

—A rumor comes from Egypt that the Mahdi is dead.

—The Reichstag at Berlin passed a motion by Dr. Windthorst to repeal the law expelling priests nonwithstanding Bismarck's opposition.

PERSONAL.

—Charles Newbold, a married coachman in Detroit, who eloped to Toledo with the daughter of C. J. Whitney, has been convicted of bigamy, and will doubtless be sentenced to seven years in the ohio penitentiary. He claims to be the genuine Sir Roger Tichborne.

—H. L. Dayne, for some years the leader of the Oklahoma raiders, died at the breakfast table at a hotel in Wellington, Kan.

—Gen. Cleveland receives a vast number of visitors. He has announced that he will accept no invitations to public demonstrations. Albany thirty cases have been forced upon him, but a dog sent from Brooklyn was promptly returned.

—A bill will soon be introduced in the United States Senate for a life pension of $5,000 per annum to Mrs. Grant, to date from his retirement from the Presidency.

—Gen. Cleveland says he intends to resign the gubernatorial office Jan. 6, 1885. As yet no mention of his future Cabinet has been determined upon.

—Francis B. Moulton, famous for his connection with the Beecher-Tilton affair, is dead.

—President Arthur has sent to the Senate the following nominations:

High McCulloch of Indiana, Secretary of the Treasury; Frank Hatton, of Iowa, Postmaster General; Lem. Schopter Crosby of New York, Attorney General; Dorsheimer Connell, James Barlow of Iowa, Presiding Judge of the Court of Claims; Chas. Nelson Judge of the Court of Claims; Chas. How The Dram Shop Helps Business.

PROF. GEORGE E. FOSTER, M. P.

The sale of intoxicating liquors has long since lost all claim to public support on moral and social considerations. Intelligent and good men are unanimous in declaring it a nuisance in both these respects. Today the sole ground on which it appears for a legal existence is the financial consideration. "Business will be injured" if the sale of liquor is prohibited, and this cry, as baseless as it is foolish, is echoed by both defenders and apologists of a cruel and destructive tariff, which not only preys upon every legitimate business, but paralyzes in myriad instances those for whom and by whom business exists. If we think carefully over this whole matter we shall easily arrive at the following underlying principles:

(a) Trade or business is due to the relationship of demand and supply. People need certain things; other people set themselves to supply those needs, and thus trade springs up, and business is transacted. If people needed nothing, then there would be nothing to be supplied, and consequently no business would be done; but we need clothes, food, houses, books, tools, furniture; and immediately, in order to supply these, the whole business of clothes making, food producing, house building, etc., etc., springs into activity.

(b) For the sake of convenience trade centers in villages, towns and cities, and people go thither for what they need, and find others there ready to supply them. They exchange or buy and sell, and thus trade thrives and prospers.
